

Microsoft at Pride in London 2018: in pictures

July 10, 2018 | Microsoft reporter

Sign up For Latest News

Enter your email address to subscribe to the Microsoft News Centre and receive alerts of new posts by email

Email Address

SUBSCRIBE

Related Posts

Coding with your eyes: UK university using Microsoft AI grant to help people with disabilities thrive in the tech sector >

Win the ultimate E3 gaming trip to Los Angeles with Xbox and ASOS >

Technology can help doctors spend more time with patients, Health Secretary told, as UK embraces AI in healthcare >

King's College London learns how to unlock the power of data >

British singer's star-studded interactive music video is powered by Microsoft AI >

Hundreds of Microsoft staff took part in the Pride in London march on Saturday.

The annual event celebrates the LGBT+ community, and is one of a series of marches across the world.

Many of those taking part in London were members of GLEAM, Microsoft's lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender employee resource group, which has a strong following globally. Here's what happened:

Reproduced for educational purposes only. Fair Use relied upon.