PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

The growing interest over the past decade in age-graded track and field competition among veteran athletes has culminated in the staging of two World Masters Championships, the first one in Toronto Canada in 1975 and the last one in Gothenburg Sweden in 1977, with the planning for the third one next year in Hannover Germany.

With the formation of the Singapore Masters Track and Field Association in December last year and the inauguration of these Championships with participation by athletes from Australia, the United States of America and other countries, athletic competition among the middle-aged and elderly has at last reached our shores.

Middle age is generally taken to mean the period from 40 to 64. For many people middle age is the prime of life, not in physical prowess, but in terms of power, affluence and influence in society. While some may wish to be truly young again, most nurture a strong desire to preserve the good health, energy and vitality of youth.

Unfortunately the notion is prevalent, in Singapore anyway, that as one advances in age, even though one has led an active life as a sportsman, one has to slow down or cease vigorous physical activity altogether.

This may explain the curious phenomenon of the wiry Singapore athlete who having reached the heights in his youth suddenly disappearing from the scene to resurface with a double chin and a prosperity paunch before he is 30.

Yet physiologists tell us that the human organism prospers with physical activity and degenerates with physical inaction. This is as true in a newly-born babe in the dawn of life as in an elderly person in the twilight years.

At these Championships you will see a group of men and women, in their "middle years", plus and minus a few years both ends, perform in track and field. They are not out there to prove anything, least of all to prove they can outdo the younger generation. They are there (and some have travelled a long way to be there) because they derive great pleasure from their chosen sport and because they love the thrill of competition. For them happiness comes not with victory but with the realisation that they have given of their best, for one can do very well and yet lose.

Their performances, some of which may be astounding, will certainly be an eye-opener and food for thought for all in Singapore, the young and the not-so-young.
