About FocalPlane

FocalPlane is the new microscopy community site, hosted by Journal of Cell Science. The site encompasses all fields in the biological sciences where they meet microscopy.

From conversations with the microscopy community, it was clear there was the need for a trusted, curated and centralised online meeting place to connect people, products, resources and information relating to microscopy. The idea for FocalPlane was born.

The ability to tackle ever-more-refined biological questions is improving as microscopy and image analysis become increasingly more complex and sophisticated. However, this has made it more and more difficult for non-experts to access user-friendly resources or tools tailored to their questions. Thus, there is a need for a platform for both microscope/software developers and researchers to exchange ideas and information to help the field develop and progress. To encourage these interactions, FocalPlane provides the opportunity to feature primers on new techniques, interviews and promote case studies, technique validation and short video tutorials.

Dr Christos Kyprianou is our Community Manager, supported by a distinguished Scientific Advisory Board.
