ment of the lew and erder so increasity to the progress of this beautiful country.

We need scarcely say that these disputes are purely local, and do not affect settlers in other places except indirectly. We should add that the future movements of the Challenger are not certainly known here, but it is reported she will go to the New Hebrides, and send the Charybdis to remain some time in Figi.

Levera, 6th August.—Ribble information has at least been received from Rewa. Mesers. Hennings and Peyne, two of the lover river settlers went up to the mountains after the 5ght, and have just returned. The Fiji men admit that upwards of forty were killed and wounded on their side, and among them the Chief of Knoo Vatts, who was the most active leader in the disturbance. He was killed at the first discharge. Poor Credenan died of his wounds, but the marine (Foskett) was recovering. The settlers below Viria are all reassured, and the mountaincers having found how hard the white men's rifles hit, appear far from over confident in their victory, and not at all disposed to pay their threatened visit to Ratu Timothy. Mr. McLoughin, the settler highest up the river, passed through the hostile tribes just after the sight. In ignorance of what had occurred he hald his usual friendly intercourse with them, and they were equally friendly in return. The settlers' houses, with the exception of Pfünger's, Lare not been burnt, but the trade and gunpowder in them have been taken away. The Challenger has left for the New Hebrides, to meet the Charybdis, and Commodore Lumbert sends the latter vessel here in about eight days' time to be at the Consul's disposal.

Levexa, 15th August.—The Charybdis arrived here on the 13th instant, from the New Hebrides, and to merrow she leaves for Bau, with the British Consul of the passes of the late hostilities, the Rewa liver.
