PUBLISHED DAILY. WEDNESDAY, MAY 22, 1872. MATTERS at Levuks, Fiji, are decidedly unsettled. At last advices both the Chief Justice and the Chief Secretary had been insulted, threatened, and assaulted; and a schooner, the Volunteer, which had been brought back to Levuks by an armed guard at the instigation of the Government, had been seised by a number of persons styling themselves indifferently the Ku Klux Kian, Vigilance Committee, and British Subjects' Mutual Protestion Society. These gentry, who, as far as can be ascertained from the local journals, are turbulent malcontents, disastisfied with the Government because the leading spirits amongst them have been left out in the cold, seem to have taken their cue from that eccentric, fussy, and self-important individual, Mr March, Her Britannic Majesty's Consul for Fiji. The probabilities indeed are that had not Mr March openly set at defiance the wishes and orders of the Levuks Government, this incipient rebellion would not have raised its head. It is difficult at this distance to perceive what the Consul had in view when he set himself in opposition to King Cakobau and his advisers; for, if he had any knowledge whatever of national law, he must have been aware that Fiji is a nation to all intents and purposes, and is self-governed. Virtually, MATTERS at Levuka, Fiji, are decidedly un-

Bo long as the majority of the settlers are animated with such sentiments, there is little to fear for this rising young nation from the menaces and violence of political usieshief-makers. But the hands of the Chief Justice must be strengthened by King Cakobau's Government, who will do wissly to organise a protective force strong enough to put down all attempts to fomest anarchy and lawlessness. Having been smongst the first of Victorian journals to hail the establishment of self-government in Fiji, we must express some surprise that the Levuks Gazatte should have given such prominence to a long letter-devoted

IN a recent number, the Alexandra Times comments on a case of considerable importance to the mining community. Some time ago, according to the version given by our contemporary, the Bank of Victoria had become, by mortgage, the holder of 550 shares in the Al claim, Raspberry Creek; but the bank would neither assist to work the claim nor advandable in lightific. the claim, nor acknowledge its liability to pay calls. Mr W. Villeneuve Emith, a barrister, who was also a large shareholder, barrister, who was also a large shareholder, at length endeavored to persuade the bank to meet its liability, but failing in this, he gave the bank notice that he would jump the ground so as to enforce its being worked. Neither persuasion nor intimidation having any effect on the bank authorities, he put his threat into execution; jumped the ground, reorganised the company under the name of the Golden Gaue, and handed back to the shareholders all their interest: reorganised the company name of the Goldem Gate, and handed back to the ahareholders all their interest; omitting, however, the bank from the distribution. The Bank of Victoris then moved the law to compel Mr Smith to recognise its shares, and the case was heard before the warden at Alexandra, and afterwards before his Honor Judge Molesworth, both of whom decided in favor of Mr Smith. The bank then appealed to the Full Court, and won. Mr Smith spealed to the Privy Council against the decision of the Full Court of the first own of the first court, and was defeated. It is stated by our contemporary that this gentleman hore and won. Mr Smith speesled to the Privy Council against the decision of the Prill Court, and was defeated. It is stated by our contemporary that this gentleman bore the whole brunt of these battles out of his own pocket, so convinced was he of the soundness of his case, both on moral and legal grounds, and the total cost to him of the proceedings from first to last has been nearly £5000. Taking the version of this matter as given by our Alexandra contemporary as correct, a case of peculiar hardship is made out; and if anything could show the loceeness of Victorian mining law, it would be this case. Like the dog in the manger, the bank would not utilise the good things spread before it, nor allow others to utilise them. The share-holders might develop the ground at their own cost, but not a pennyworth of assistance would they get from the holder of 550 shares. The bank, in fact, hung like a dead weight round the neck of the company, and in Mr Smith's efforts to shake off the encumbrance, the bank won everything, and the enterprising and energetic man goes to the wall with a loss of nearly £50001 Whatever may be the legal quibbles through which the bank triumphed in the end, there will be no difference of opinion amongst persons engaged in mining as to the absence of equity in the final decision in this case, or as to the false position to which it reduces mining companies. If the bank had paid calls, or shown a disposition to pay them, then Mr Smith would have undoubtedly been wrong in endeavoring to dispossesse it of its rights; but in refusing to pay calls the bank not alone prevented the mine from being developed, but in howed a desire to benefit purely by the capital and labor of others, on whom it had no claim, and to whom it had no moral right to look for redress. The case is certainly one of considerable importance to mining companies, since the mortgage of shares is a very ordinary occurrence; and it also serves to show how hollow and rotten those laws are which deal with the mining interests of this col

The Britanes Marganes and students of the Services of the Serv because he had no money wherewith to procure a new license. The City Council seemed to recognise the justice of Mr Mitchell's representations, and promised to take the matter into consideration. The outcome of its deliberations should be to allow licenses to be transferable; or at least to issue them pro rate during the year. It is questionable whether cabmen should be taxed as all; but there can be no difference of opinion as to the injustice of observing a man the same amount for a difference of opinion as to the injustice of charging a man the same amount for a license on the 29th December as he would license on the 29th December as he would be called upon to pay for the same document if taken out on the lat or 2nd of the previous January. True, the same principle applies to all other licenses, but that fact does not prove the system to be one of municipal equity.
