 Genetic engineering

There is a reason why genetic engineering and HIV are being held on to with all their might.

Knight Sir John Maddox, one of the most powerful men at the time & former editor of one of the world's most respected journals for natural sciences NATURE, already unpacked years ago.

An article that gets under your skin.

A personal story by Dr Stefan Lanka

Maddox studied at Oxford's elite college, Christ Church (The Temple of Christ), which has produced half of England's prime ministers to date and whose patron is the Queen. After teaching theoretical physics and the Big Bang hypothesis, and proving himself as a journalist, he was set up for global leadership at the Nuffield Foundation: He became for many years the editor of Nature, that most globally influential journal that determines what science is.

The Nuffield Foundation, the best-known British public think-tank, was set up by industry during World War II and from the 1960s served to establish the concept of life science, with the aim of the extensive industrial exploitation of human life, which bio-ethics redefined as a "human vegetable".

In 1990, Maddox achieved international fame when he claimed that he and others had indirectly proved that homeopathic remedies have no effect.

In doing so, against his better judgement, he used the false ideas of orthodox medicine, according to which diseases have the same causes in all people and should be treated in the same way. It was precisely this basis that the inventor of homeopathy, Samuel Hahnemann, had broken with and proved that the active substance is not the physical substance itself, but the biological-physical information for which the substance is the carrier, and that the causes and therapy of each person can only have a chance of success individually.

In 1993, he was once again noticed globally when he successfully called for international censorship of the results of the analysis of HIV and AIDS because of the reporting by Neville Hodgkinson on the front page of the Sunday Times[1] [2] about the AIDS fraud in Africa, which was joined particularly conspicuously and vociferously by those media and groups that define themselves as "red", "left", "alternative" and "green". What, on the other hand, is recommended to all states on the recommendation of the CDC (Pentagon) and its post office, the WHO, is the promotion of the so-called critics to be involved, as has happened, in joint decision-making.

He caught my eye in the spring of 1992 when he published a harsh critique of the US HIV and AIDS concept in Nature before the alternative AIDS conference in mid-May 1992.

Note Corona_Facts beginning:

Maddox himself now admitted that the failure to discover the cause of AIDS beyond doubt "has been a profound disappointment to the research community" and that "the mechanism of pathogenesis (how it causes disease) of the disease has not yet been uncovered." [1]

Did Luc Montagnier discover HIV? To quote Luc Montagnier, "We haven't purified it!"

In an interview with Djamel Tahi [3] (pages 31 - 35), Luc Montagnier (Nobel Prize winner for the discovery of HIV) confirmed several elementary things at once:

that he had never isolated the virus in purified form, (note: you now know how important this aspect is)

- that the claimed proteins, which are supposed to be specific for HIV, are not sufficient for a detection anyway
- that he could not name any study in which HIV was published photographed in purified isolation
- that for the characterisation (i.e. of which proteins the "virus" is composed) the analysis of the proteins of the virus, a mass production and a purification would be necessary, but that this has failed!
- that actually only a sum of "specific" properties suggested that this must be a new virus.

(Note: It is only a speculation, these properties also exist in other processes).

● In another interview excerpt [4] from the film "House of Numbers" [5], Dr. Luc Montagnier does not mince his words. He is very clear in his statements, which he repeats several times in different ways. His arguments are essentially (paraphrased):

You can be exposed to AIDS without becoming infected.

- A strong immune system can protect you from AIDS.
- You can ward off AIDS with the help of a good diet and clean drinking water.
- The importance of AIDS vaccines is exaggerated.
- AIDS can be fought with low-cost, highly effective alternatives to vaccines.
- What people in Africa really need is better nutrition to protect themselves from AIDS.
- The facts about nutrition and AIDS are neglected (by the medical establishment).
- At the end of the interview, before the cameras are turned off, he even admits to Leung that what he just said was basically a "bombshell" of information that contradicts conventional AIDS scientists like Dr Fauci.

If one analyses and summarises all these contradictions and statements in the interviews, one must clearly come to the conclusion that one is dealing with beliefs here, there can and must be no talk of clear evidence and scientific proof here!

Note Corona_Facts END:

I met him there in person and we became friends when I helped John Maddox get his mandolin disease back under control in the short term. He told me that it was a godsend to him that the HIV lie hadn't blown up in the USA's face yet, since their whole AIDS concept looked so obviously illogical and fraudulent.

But now the important thing: John implored me that the HIV lie must never become public because otherwise it would drag genetic engineering down with it.

It was clear to me that the HIV idea could only have come about on the basis of the "central dogma of molecular genetics", the idea of a gene and that DNA was the information carrier and the flow of information would only flow in one direction (see the analyses on genetic engineering in the issues of "Living with a Future"), but why shouldn't genetic engineering, which can do nothing but "lie", make metabolism more difficult and life impossible, also go into the realm of myths?

I was speechless and John took great pains to explain:

"The Occident must maintain leadership in the world or our culture would disappear. The only moment of the West's supremacy, he said, was people's belief that the West had superior technology, genetic engineering. If this belief were to inevitably collapse along with HIV, people's respect and fear would collapse and with it the supremacy of the West."

The first moment I was glad I studied biology so I could be pro-life and became a "virologist", the next moment I saw how simple everything is. But when I saw that the man who has the opportunity to make the global HIV misdevelopment public will not do so after all because of the "supremacy of the Occident" and I started to freeze, I was glad that he had left some in the bottle of cognac I got him earlier after all, which he left for me to consume the rest with a fatherly gesture.

The most important lesson from this story: Only "small" people with an interest in life and a will to live can bring about something in favour of life and the preservation of life on this earth, because "big" people no longer have this will to live. Mostly they have only become "big" because they sacrifice life in favour of their dependent careers.

With the "big" ones, there is some "dominion" over everything, which they do not approach, but only stabilise, because they profit, and because of all the psychoses that their parents probably beat into them as children, they no longer want to see reality, even to the point of self-denial and destruction.

The sad reality is that many perpetuate a false assertion for base motives, even though they know that this thesis is untenable.

Only together are we able to break down entrenched dogmas, pave the way for better theories and thus prevent human suffering and, above all, further pseudo-pandemics.

We are working day and night to serve them all the evidence on a silver platter so that they have a firm basis for their arguments.

— What we have worked out in over 30 years of the most intensive research, independently financed control experiments, court cases won, personal exchanges, as well as correspondence with the world's leading virologists and institutions is beyond the imagination of most people.

— Each book contains independent knowledge that forces every state, politician, scientist and citizen into action.

— Our Promise: We PROVE that ALL claims of the existence of disease-causing viruses, pandemics, the contagion theory as well as vaccines are based on a fallacy and are a danger to life and limb.
