Dear Doctor Good,

Please accept the below comments in your modification considerations to the NARW vessel speed reduction efforts.

The Wilmington Cape Fear Pilots Association, LLC (Wilmington Pilots) are a group of State and Federally Licensed Pilots charged with the safe and expeditious movement of large ocean going vessels operating within the confines of the federally maintained Cape Fear River and Approaches. As such, we are a primary stakeholder and directly impacted by any changes to the current NARW Speed Rule Assessment.

The Wilmington Pilots consider our association a partner with NOAA and its strategies in the perpetual protection of the endangered North Atlantic Right Whale and remain a diligent participant in its continued protection. Strict adherence to all NOAA SMA guidelines will continue to be followed until any such guideline supersedes the professional mariners duty to the vessel, the environment, The Port of Wilmington, and the State of North Carolina and its waters to maintain a safe speed.

The outer bar of the Cape Fear River is federally maintained at a width of 500 ft and is the area subject to the speed deviation regulation. There are no jetties and the channel is subjected to severe crosswinds and current sets especially during the SMA months. The channel widths are insufficient to safely maintain slow speeds especially when considering the dimensions of the Ultra Large Container Carriers calling the port today. A reduction in speed greatly increases these vessels' dynamic beam or true swept path when factoring in the leeway that must be maintained. As these vessels approach the channel edges, severe hydrodynamic forces create directionally unstable maneuvering characteristics that can be extremely dangerous. Furthermore, commerce requires that large ocean going vessels routinely meet within the confines of the federal channel. When meeting vessels are required to maintain speeds below 10 knots, the dynamic beams of both vessels are increased and therefore compounds the dangers of collision or grounding. Therefore, the Wilmington Pilots oppose any changes to the current speed deviation rule and any consideration of pre-notification for any speed deviation decided as prudent between the Pilot and the Master of the vessel.

Furthermore, the Wilmington Pilots also oppose reducing the size of the vessels for which the current vessel speed restrictions apply. The Wilmington Pilots have invested heavily in vessels that are purpose built and provide a safe and efficient platform for Pilot transfer. Reducing the size of the vessel for which the rule applies will adversely effect the safety of our crew and will undoubtedly be a burden to the carriers we service.

The undersigned remains available for any questions or comments you may have and thank you in advance for your consideration of our concerns.

Best regards,

To Whom It May Concern:

The North Atlantic Right Whale Vessel Speed Rule Assessment published in June 2020 by NOAA Fisheries; Office of Protected Resources highlights that the vessel speed restrictions imposed by 50 CFR § 224.105 have been significantly effective at reducing mortal vessel strikes. It is our recommendation that the rules and allowable deviations remain as written. The final assessment recognizes the effectiveness of the changes. Why change something that is working?

The assessment infers that there exists the potential to re-examine, and potential alter or enhance some of the provisions of the rule. If NOAA decides to make any changes, it is their responsibility to ensure all changes proposed consider the health and safety of the mariner, both professional and recreational, as well as worst case scenario environmental impacts. If changes are made that place mariners on inappropriately sized vessels, or in scenarios where safe navigation is negatively impacted by speed restrictions, then said rule places the safety and health of the Right Whales above the safety and health of the mariners and the environment.

Comments of specific issues:

Vessel Speed Deviations: One issue that warrants discussion is the ability for a vessel to deviate from the required max speed of 10 knots to safely maneuver the vessel. 50 CFR § 224.105(c) states:

“A vessel may operate at a speed necessary to maintain safe maneuvering speed instead of the required ten knots only if justified because the vessel is in an area where oceanographic, hydrographic and/or meteorological conditions severely restrict the maneuverability of the vessel and the need to operate at such speed is confirmed by the pilot on board or, when a vessel is not carrying a pilot, the master of the vessel. If a deviation from the ten-knot speed limit is necessary, the reasons for the deviation, the speed at which the vessel is operated, the latitude and longitude of the area, and the time and duration of such deviation shall be entered into the logbook of the vessel. The master of the vessel shall attest to the accuracy of the logbook entry by signing and dating it.”

This provision is essential to the safe navigation of all vessels. As vessels become larger, the consequences of vessel casualties also increase. The Port of Savannah hosts some of the largest container vessels calling on the East Coast of the US. It is imperative that these vessels are afforded the ability to operate at a speed necessary to safely transit into and out of the vital port of Savannah. It should be noted that the Port of Savannah utilizes 2-way traffic, making the ability to navigate safely, or failure to do so, even more consequential. A vessel grounding or collision with another vessel in the in the Port of Savannah, or the approaches to the port, could result in an absolutely devastating environmental catastrophe. With each container vessel routinely carrying over 3 million gallons of fuel, an oil spill from a vessel casualty would be devastating to the marine ecosystem, erasing all of the good the speed rule changes have provided.

It was mentioned in the assessment, of possibly requiring vessels utilize a system for “possible contemporaneous electronic notification of safety deviations.” Safe vessel maneuvering requires a master and/or pilot that is completely focused on piloting the vessel. Requiring contemporaneous electronic notification would be an unacceptable distraction to a person or persons involved in the safe transit of a vessel. A log entry in the ship’s log is a sufficient method of logging safety speed deviations. A ship’s log is a legal document and is required on both US and Foreign flagged vessels. An entry into the ship’s log documenting the speed deviation is more than sufficient method of tracking deviations.

Vessels under 65’ in length: As the current rule is written, there are no speed restriction for vessels less than 65’ in length. We strongly recommend keeping this aspect of the speed rule in place. The assessment mentions the need for regulatory or outreach action towards vessels less than 65’. We strongly recommend focusing on outreach to recreational boaters operating vessels in the SMA. The professional mariners are extremely cognizant of the right whale rules and are diligent in looking out for the safety of the whales. It would be of great detriment to the safety and wellbeing of mariners, primarily professional mariners, if these speed restrictions were to be imposed on smaller vessels. By potentially limiting the speed of smaller vessels you would create two unsafe conditions. Vessels under 65’ are, obviously, drastically more impacted by sea state than larger vessels. Commercial mariners operating vessels under 65’ in length (fisherman, salvage professionals, survey vessels, pilots, etc.) would be forced to conduct their business at slower speeds, regardless of sea state. This certainly has the potential to put the mariners in a position of reduced stability and maneuverability. The other option would be for the professional mariners to rely on smaller vessels to ensure they can operate at higher speeds. Either scenario puts the mariner in position where they are required to operate their vessels in unsafe conditions or at unsafe parameters. A prime example of this is demonstrated by the USCG on a fairly routine basis. When sea states become too great for the USCG Response Boat Medium (45’) to transport boarding officers offshore, they routinely request a ride from a pilot boat. The pilot boat, at just under 65’ in length, is a far more stable and safer platform in rough seas.

Additionally, due to lack of AIS data on smaller vessels, there is no way to accurately assess whether they are a threat to right whales. If NOAA is examining implementing speed restrictions on smaller vessels, they assuredly would have to conduct a valid assessment and demonstrate that such a rule change is needed.

Speed Restrictions in Dredged Channels: We urge NOAA to eliminate the speed restrictions for commercial vessels while operating within a dredged entrance channel. There exists less than 8 square miles of entrance channels between the ports of NY and Jacksonville, an exorbitantly small geographic area. By eliminating the speed restrictions within those channels, for commercial vessels, the rule becomes much simpler for mariners, both recreational and professional, to understand, and easier to enforce. There are no safety deviations to track/approve and all commercial vessels, regardless of size, would be free to operate safely within the small confines of an entrance channel. This is similar to the way the entrance channels to Boston are exempt from this speed rule.

I would be happy to discuss my concerns in further detail at your request.

Sincerely,

Dr. Good,

Attached are my comments in word and .pdf format concerning the June 2020 NOAA North Atlantic Right Whale Vessel Speed Rule Assessment.

Also attached is a story of my meeting between the MV STAR ISTIND and a young Right Whale last August, which is very germane to this assessment.

I appreciate the work NOAA is attempting to do to address this important issue.

I hope this is helpful. Please contact me anytime if I can be of any assistance in this matter.

Thank you for considering my opinion.

Respectfully,

Bob

Cross-Border Wanderings of a Young Whale

Tuesday, July 21, 2020 was a normal workday for me until mid-morning, when the phone rang; it was a friend who captains the (b)(6) PII whale and wildlife watch boat out of St. Andrews, New Brunswick (NB).

“Is there a whale in distress?” I asked quickly (that is usually why he calls!). “No,” he said, “We have a right whale just off East Quoddy Head!” East Quoddy Head is at the northern tip of Campobello Island, NB—where I live. Woohoo! This was the first right whale sighting of the season to be reported in the Bay of Fundy, and it put an end to my routine office work for a few exciting hours.

I called my co-worker (b)(6) PII, who leads our Campobello Whale Rescue Team and owns a whale watch boat. In record time, (b)(6) PII, me, and a few family members and friends were aboard his boat and away. We soon spotted the whale in Chocolate Cove on the eastern shore of Deer Island, NB. There, a lone right whale, perhaps 35 feet in length (about the same length as (b)(6) PII boat) was surfacing about every five minutes and just ambling along the shore on the flood tide.

The whale heads further into the Passage. Photo: (b)(6) PII, Canadian Whale Institute

My digital camera allowed for some close-up identification photos, which I immediately emailed to the Right Whale Research Program at the New England Aquarium. The team worked their usual magic and matched the whale to the 2019 calf of Catalog #2791; she looked small because she's only 1.5 years old! Her last recorded sighting was February 18, 2020 off Daytona Beach, Florida.

Mom #2791 and her calf in July 2019. Photo: New England Aquarium/Canadian Whale Institute.

We followed her southerly travels through the "Old Sow" whirlpool and into US coastal waters, off Eastport, Maine, where she swam alongside a docked cruise ship and entertained the quarantined crew members, before heading as far south as Estes Head. Eastport residents turned out along the shore as word spread about this visitor. Right whales sightings are still rare in Head Harbour Passage, but there has been a small increase in the number of sightings over the past seven years.

We were soon wondering how far south this whale was going to swim as the waters get very narrow and the current increases off Lubec, ME (location of the field station for the NEAq Right Whale Research Program). Could the whale sense the change in water conditions? At about the same time that the tide changed, the whale swam a mile or so easterly from Estes Head, across Head Harbour Passage, back into Canadian waters. She had a look at some salmon pens in Friars Bay, then headed back north along the Campobello Island shore with the ebbing tide.

On our return to Campobello Island, I called the local harbor pilot, (b)(6) PII to see if any incoming ships were scheduled. There hadn't been many this year, but sure enough, he was scheduled to bring one in that evening. As a precaution, (b)(6) PII took his boat back out to keep an eye on the whale and relay her positions to (b)(6) PII - the incoming ship and the whale would be in closest proximity in the narrowest part of Head Harbour Passage. (b)(6) PII instructed the ship to cut its engines to ease past the whale at 2.6 knots, and with the ship and the whale headed in opposite directions, they passed by with no incident. The young whale was last seen heading back out into the Bay of Fundy.

This encounter reflects a great collaborative effort that's developed over many years by friends and colleagues on both sides of these border towns.

Ref: North Atlantic Right Whale Vessel Speed Rule Assessment – June 2020

I have been asked by Maine Department of Marine Resources Commissioner Patrick Keliher to review the Right Whale Speed Rule Assessment.

By way of background, I am a licensed ship Master (unlimited) and a ship pilot in Eastport, Maine. I also hold First Class Pilotage in Penobscot Bay and River and Frenchman Bay in Maine. I hold pilotage for the Delaware River; Valdez, Alaska; Sabine and Neches Rivers in Texas; Puerto de Yabucoa, Puerto Rico; and the Great Lakes. I sailed on freighters and tankers worldwide for 20 years, serving as Master (starting when I was 27) for 14 years on seven tankers, including as Master on the 400,000 DWT UST ATLANTIC, the largest ship ever built in the Western Hemisphere.

My “whale education” started when I was 11 at herring weirs in Lubec, Maine. I have been involved in sardines, salmon, scallops, lobster, sea urchins, and ground fish for over 50 years. In Maine I have extensive experience through piloting, the fisheries, and in association with whale research over 40 years (New England Aquarium and Canadian Whale Institute). In Downeast Maine this includes Beluga, Fin, Minke, Humpback, and the Right Whales. Worldwide I also worked around Orcas, Grey Whales, Humpbacks, and Sperm whales.

I have carefully reviewed the Speed Rule Assessment, Appendix A and B, the Economic Analysis and in consultation with Dr. Moira Brown of the Canadian Whale Institute and Dr. Scott Krause, formerly of New England Aquarium. Dr. Brown sent me the Canadian Ship Speed Vessel Assessment Report which can be found attached to this e-mail.

I will comment about the NOAA 2020 Vessel Speed Rule Assessment in the following areas:

Communication
Visibility
USN/USCG Compliance
Training
NOAA Outreach
High Speed Vessels
Pilot Relations
Vessel Size
NOAA/Canadian Issues.

Many of these issues are very interrelated.

Ref: North Atlantic Right Whale Vessel Speed Rule Assessment – June 2020

COMMUNICATION

What seems clear in the Assessment and the supporting documents is that the key to compliance to the mandatory speed limit in the SMA areas and especially the voluntary speed limit in the DMA area is communication, between NOAA and the ship owners, agents, operators, Masters, Mates, waterway users (fishermen) and especially the Pilots.

I have witnessed the US Coast Guard's Notice to Mariners, Local NTM Broadcasts, and Medium wave Broadcasts, but none can compare to the Canadian Vessel Traffic Centers (Fundy Traffic and Halifax Traffic) notices concerning Right Whale activity in the Gulf of Maine, Bay of Fundy, and the Nova Scotia Coast. All merchant vessels and indeed most fishing vessels and many yachts monitor VHF channels 14 and 12 for traffic information, and this system works very well to notify all vessels of Right Whale information.

The coast of Maine is perhaps the most observed coast along the Eastern coast of North America, especially during the periods of Right Whale transits and activity, due to lobster fishermen, draggers, seiners, ferries, yachts, whale watching, Right Whale research, and Coast Guard activity. Right Whale sightings by these vessels should be encouraged to be reported even more than they currently are, to reach the efficiency of the Canadian Bay of Fundy/Nova Scotia reporting. NOAA, USCG, Maine Dept. of Marine Resources, the Whale watch industry, and especially the lobstermen should be encouraged and incentivized to make this communication system really work along the Maine Coast.

VISIBILITY

One issue that is especially important and little discussed in the Assessment is visibility from the bridge of various types of vessels. The Rules of the Road stress lookouts be stationed "as low down and as far forward as possible". This is also critical in Right Whale areas during active periods. Merchant ships are minimally crewed which make stationing extra lookouts for Right Whales difficult at best. The design of the bridge position becomes even more important.

On most tankers, bulk carriers, freighters, tug/barge integrated units, and many container ships, the wheelhouse is all the way aft on the ship (up to 1,000 feet.) On the ULCC (Ultra Large Container Carriers) with up to 20,000 containers aboard, the house is generally about a third of the way back from the bow, which can be 400 feet aft of the bow. These aft wheelhouse positions cause areas directly ahead, especially under the bow up to 1 mile ahead, to be blind.

On cruise ships, fast ferries (up to 50 knots), and USN Destroyers (DDG) the wheel house is generally far forward giving much better visibility under the bow.

All this is extremely important, as Masters will consider the viewing area ahead in their decision making at sea, especially in areas of voluntary speed reductions. Another important consideration is the trim of the vessel (tankers and barges when in ballast and some freighters when partially loaded) which can add to the loss of viewing zones directly ahead.

Although visibility is mentioned in the assessment, I believe it is a much more important area for research and review that must be considered.

Ref: North Atlantic Right Whale Vessel Speed Rule Assessment – June 2020

USN/USCG COMPLIANCE

According to the Assessment the USN, USCG, and other government vessels are exempt from the Right Whale speed rules.

I was a Captain in the U.S. Navy Reserve (30 years service) and have piloted U.S. Navy ships into Eastport for over 30 years. Most U.S. Navy ships are extremely sensitive to Right Whale issues, including speed, but there is a real difference in the knowledge of some crews, especially depending on the ship's general operating area.

As a ship pilot what is clear from many conversations with merchant ship masters, is they do not understand why they must follow the speed rules, while the Navy, with much faster ships, does not need to comply. This is an area that NOAA must address.

TRAINING

An area of great importance that could help U.S. mariners (especially deck officers) is Right Whale training. Does NOAA, the USCG, the Right Whale research organizations, Maine DMR, or others run a seminar (perhaps 2 hours) at each Maritime Academy, Union School, Training School (Mid Atlantic, NE Maritime, etc.) for the senior 3rd Mates in their last year of training? This is critical to bringing compliance from at least the U.S. Flag fleet. Education is the key.

NOAA OUTREACH

I am aware that NOAA has a professionally produced CD concerning Right Whale issues, but perhaps now with current technology the information would be better presented either on a USB stick for distribution to everyone getting a merchant marine deck license in the United States, or even better an online (YouTube, Facebook) type presentation.

This information could be tailored in different editions with the help of the Right Whale research community for Merchant Vessels, Fishing Vessels, Pleasure Vessels/Yachts, and Naval/Government Vessels.

HIGH SPEED / AUTONOMOUS VESSELS

An important area in the Speed Rule Assessment that was not well covered is High Speed Ferries and Autonomous Vessels. Both types of vessels are becoming more prevalent worldwide. These types operate now or will be soon along the coast of Maine. Particularly on the autonomous vessels, who will be the lookout?

PILOT RELATIONS

As a pilot in an area frequented occasionally by Right Whales, we try extremely hard to “educate” the freighters, Navy ships, and exceptionally large yachts concerning the presence and exact location of Right Whales.

Over the last 20 years I have always kept the ship speed at 10 knots or less, entering or leaving Eastport, as we have various whale species here almost year-round.

Ref: North Atlantic Right Whale Vessel Speed Rule Assessment – June 2020

I send each ship master by e-mail (at least 2 days out from arrival at the pilot station) a twenty-item advisory. This advisory includes the Canadian Whale Institute .pdf brochure concerning Right Whale activity in Eastern Canada/Gulf of Maine. A copy is attached. Sending this brochure is perhaps the best training/notice I can do for Merchant masters. The vessels really appreciate the information.

A similar type of brochure prepared for Maine fishermen/lobstermen, e-mailed out to every license holder each spring with the latest information, may go a long way to helping with the communication and training issues concerning Right Whales.

It is important for NOAA (and the Maine DMR) to remember that every ship arriving or departing a U.S. port is taking a pilot. The pilots are the key to obtaining speed compliance from the vessels, especially if the pilots are informed of Right Whale activity. The Canadians (both Right Whale research organizations and the government) are extremely helpful in keeping us informed of Right Whale activity. The New England Aquarium has, over the last 40 years, kept us closely informed of Right Whale activity. Whale watch organizations, on both sides of the border, are invaluable letting me know where the whale activity is occurring (not just for Right Whales) and we try to do the same for them.

VESSEL SIZE

One issue that is important for NOAA to consider is the very rapid increase in size of Container ships over the last 2 or 3 years. Many ships (OGV) are now 1,100 to 1,200 feet long and 150 to 165 feet wide. Controlling these ships in high winds is difficult, especially at low speeds, as demonstrated by the Evergreen VLCC in the Suez Canal this week. The Canadian Ship Speed Assessment Report certainly lays out the basic information but dealing with mother nature can always lead to interesting situations.

NOAA/CANADIAN ISSUES

I know there is communication between NOAA and the Canadian DOT and Fisheries and Oceans, but it is clear to me that concerning Right Whale issues, especially along the coast of Maine, the Right Whales do not really care which side of the border they are on. The whales care about food, sex, and curiosity. The more our two federal governments, our State and Provincial governments, our dozen agencies, and whale research organizations work together to educate and work together with private industry, the better chance we have of Right Whale recovery.

As research continues to identify Right Whale individual locations (such as the DARPA project) technology may be the best hope for future avoidance of collisions.

CRUISE LINES INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION (CLIA) COMMENTS ON NOAA'S REPORT ON REDUCING VESSEL STRIKES ON NORTH ATLANTIC WHALES

Cruise Lines International Association (CLIA) is the world's largest cruise industry trade association, providing a unified voice and leading authority of the global cruise community. The association has 15 offices globally with representation in North and South America, Europe, Asia, and Australasia. CLIA supports policies and practices that foster a safe, secure, healthy, and sustainable cruise ship environment for the more than 27 million passengers who cruise annually and is dedicated to promoting the cruise travel experience. The CLIA Community is comprised of the world's most prestigious ocean, river, and specialty cruise lines; a highly trained and certified travel agent community; and cruise line suppliers and partners, including ports & destinations, ship development, suppliers, and business services. The organization's mission is to be the unified global organization that helps its members succeed by advocating, educating, and promoting for the common interests of the cruise community.

NOAA'S Report on Reducing Vessel Strikes on North Atlantic Whales

In 2013, NOAA Fisheries committed to publish a report evaluating the conservation value and economic and navigational safety impacts of the 2008 North Atlantic right whale vessel speed regulations (50 CFR § 224.105). The report was finalized in June 2020 and evaluates four aspects of the right whale vessel speed rule: biological efficacy, mariner compliance, impacts to navigational safety, and economic cost to mariners. It also provides a detailed assessment of the rule's effectiveness and assesses general trends in vessel traffic characteristics within Seasonal Management Areas over time.

CLIA and its Cruise Line Members appreciate the important work of NOAA in reducing the likelihood of deaths and serious injuries to these endangered whales that result from collisions with vessels. Members adhere to vessel speed restrictions but would like to address concerns on the proposed regulation.

CLIA Comments

The current speed regulations provide an exception to allow vessels to operate at a speed greater than 10 knots, only if necessary, to maintain a safe maneuvering speed in an area where conditions severely restrict vessel maneuverability as determined by the pilot or master. It also requires specific information to be entered into the vessel's logbook.

However, large deep-draft vessels operating without tugs will always need to operate at a minimum speed in order to navigate safely in a channel, fairway, or Traffic Separation Scheme, based on the current weather conditions; and in most cases, this speed will be greater than 10 knots.

Since the aforementioned exception to the speed regulations would always apply when vessels are operating in a channel, fairway, or Traffic Separation Scheme (e.g., Boston Traffic Separation Scheme), CLIA Members recommend that NOAA considers exempting the vessels that operate within the channels, fairways, or Traffic Separation Schemes of the Management Areas from the speed regulations. This would eliminate undue concern by the pilot/master who might be concerned of being cited for speed rule violations that might jade operational judgement, and it would eliminate the need for a vessel to conduct a logbook entry every time they entered a channel, fairway, or Traffic Separation Scheme.

It is important to note that in order to keep a vessel in the channel, fairway, or Traffic Separation Scheme, the pilot/master must use the rudder to steer the vessel into the lateral forces. This often results in the vessel "crabbing" in the channel, fairway, or Traffic Separation Scheme. The crab angle and effective beam increase if either the lateral forces (wind and current) increase or the longitudinal force (ship speed) decreases. The ratio of lateral forces to the longitudinal force is increased, thus requiring more rudder angle to remain in the channel, fairway, or Traffic Separation Scheme. The slower the ship speed, the higher percent of the channel, fairway, or Traffic Separation Scheme width is occupied by the vessel. In addition, vessels operating at larger crab angles require more rudder angle to maintain their heading. This decreases the maneuverability available to the pilot should it be required. Furthermore, vessels traveling at slower speeds would have less time and maneuverability to recover from emergency situations, such as a potential engine failure, that occur in real-life scenarios.

Thank you for the opportunity to comment on NOAA's Report on Reducing Vessel Strikes to North Atlantic Whales. March 11, 2021

Dear Dr. Good,

As President of the Florida Harbor Pilots Association, I am reaching out on behalf of our members to comment on the latest Right Whale Speed Rule Assessment published in June 2020.

Florida state law requires that any foreign flagged vessel over seven feet of draft must utilize a state licensed harbor pilot to navigate the vessel into and out of our seaports as our pilots have the most intimate knowledge of the habitats, ecosystems and gradations of the currents surrounding our seaports. The sole purpose for this law is to protect the state's precious assets from both an economic and environmental standpoint. While we completely understand the sensitivity and grave situation of the Right Whale population, we feel that any expansion or amendment of the current Right Whale Speed Rule Regulations could pose an even greater risk from a navigational standpoint for not only our pilot vessels, but especially the larger ocean-going vessels that our pilots must handle on a daily basis.

As read in the Assessment, the current regulations sufficiently protect both the species and allow professional mariners, such as state licensed harbor pilots, to safely navigate larger ocean-going vessels through confined offshore channels and safely into port, often at speeds substantially greater than 10 knots to maintain safe navigation. Our highly skilled harbor pilots applaud and are grateful for the speed deviation provided in 50 CFR 224.1105 as it permits professional mariners to use their experience and informed judgment to determine a "safe speed" to ensure navigation safety and protect the marine environment.

If you do choose to amend the current regulations, we would strongly support the idea of exempting the federally approved dredged channels from the speed restrictions for the reasons stated above and, once again, to protect our state that relies very heavily on its ocean economy. Exempting all of the federally improved dredged channels from Boston to Jacksonville would reduce the 15,000+ square miles of waters covered by the seasonal speed restrictions by just a fraction of 1%.

Thank you for your time and consideration of our comments.

Sincerely,

Dear Dr. Good:

The South Carolina Ports Authority (SCPA) has reviewed the draft report entitled, “North Atlantic Right Whale (Eubalaena glacialis) Vessel Speed Rule Assessment” dated June 2020. SCPA is concerned about several assertions and recommendations that may lead to detrimental impacts on maritime commerce both in South Carolina as well as other eastern seaboard ports.

SCPA is genuinely committed to taking steps to protect and preserve the North Atlantic Right Whale. In fact, SCPA contributed $1,000,000 to fund right whale aerial surveys to provide vital information to wildlife managers on right whale calving distribution and location of these animals. The SCPA funded surveys spanned from Cape Romain, SC to Fripp Island, SC. Conducted over a period of 5 years, the data provided by these surveys enabled biologists to gain much needed information to aid in understanding the right whales movement and behavior. SCPA is proud to have contributed to this effort.

It is critical that steps are taken to appropriately balance conservation goals with the need to ensure and promote safety as cargo is moved into and out of our nation’s ports. One of the most challenging, and potentially dangerous, aspects of moving freight through our nation’s harbors comes as ships move from the open ocean to navigational channels (dredged and maintained by the US Army Corps of Engineers) and, finally, to berth where cargo can be loaded/unloaded. This activity is vital to our state, region, and Nation’s economy.

SCPA recognizes the importance of complying with speed restrictions within seasonal management areas (SMAs). However, putting burdensome restrictions on vessels moving within dredged channels not only puts in danger these vessels as they traverse these areas but also puts at risk the safe, efficient movement of cargo into ports, and American exports out of ports. As vessel traffic converges on these channels, shoals, unique hazards, challenging winds, and tidal currents require expert judgement of pilots to ensure safety during this passage. Under SC law, the main objectives for harbor pilots are the safety of vessels in transit, of navigation channels and other navigable waterways, and protection of the marine environment. This is a responsibility that the Charleston Harbor Pilots take very seriously. The recommendation that vessels make “contemporaneous electronic notification of safety deviations” could jeopardize the ability of pilots to exercise judgement and make swift decisions as they guide vessels through these channels. Captains need to have the ability to react quickly without having to worry about reporting requirements and notifications before or in the middle of safety maneuvers.

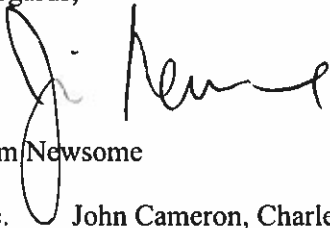

Increased preemptive reporting requirements should balance the risk reduction to North Atlantic right whale strikes with the risk increase for other environmental catastrophes that could occur due to the reduction in vessel safety (e.g., marine debris, hazardous waste, oil spills, etc.). These requirements could have unacceptable and significant consequences due to increased risk of environmental damages and navigational safety within and approaching busy ports.

SCPA would recommend that based upon the twenty plus years of vessel strike data, that NMFS consider the exemption of federal navigation channels from the speed rule provisions. Doing so would only exempt less than 8 sq nautical miles from the speed rule and would not appreciably increase risk to right whales.

We hope that the National Marine Fisheries Service will work closely with SCPA, Charleston Harbor Pilots, other east coast Ports, the American Association of Port Authorities (AAPA), and other maritime industry stakeholders to determine an accurate effect of the recommendations on port communities. SCPA is hopeful that these recommendations would be implemented in such a manner that will both protect the North Atlantic right whale from vessels activity and at the same time not adversely affect the shipping industry, port communities, nor the environment.

As an aside, I have the privilege of serving on Secretary Raimondo's Advisory Council for Supply Chain Competitiveness (ACSCC) and I hope to have the chance to meet you on a future trip to Washington, DC once face-to-face meetings are reinstated.

Dear Dr. Good,

On behalf of the Georgia Ports Authority, I would like to express serious concern regarding the recommendations made in the North Atlantic Right Whale (Eubalaena glacialis) Vessel Speed Rule Assessment. We believe that the data presented in this assessment does not warrant a call for increased restrictions and that a stricter decree would create a detrimental effect on the safety and economic impact of U.S. East Coast maritime commerce on the nation's economy.

While we have seen the number of North Atlantic Right Whale (NARW) mortalities due to vessel strikes decline significantly in the ten years since the speed restrictions were enacted, confirmed NARW vessel strike injuries (serious or otherwise) and mortalities in the U.S. in total have not declined at all – with 17 vessel strikes occurring in the ten years prior to the 2008 rule and 17 vessel strikes happening in the ten years since (page 23, table 3 of the assessment.) The assessment notes that “(t)he decrease in observed vessel strike mortality is a positive sign, and provides evidence that the speed rule may have helped to reduce mortality,” and states that the increase in injuries needs further monitoring.” (p. 24) However, it does not address the fact that despite the “over the 20- year study period changes in whale monitoring efforts, protocols for determining serious injuries, as well as mariner awareness (that) may have impacted vessel strike detection and injury classification,” (p. 24) the total number of confirmed vessel strikes has not declined. Therefore, we do not believe that this assessment makes a compelling case that speed restrictions do, in fact, reduce vessel strikes on the NARW.

The size of vessels calling on East Coast ports has changed considerably since 2008, particularly with regards to Roll-On/Roll-Off (RoRo) and container vessels. For example, in 2008, many of the container vessels calling on the Port of Savannah traversed the Panama Canal (prior to their 2016 expansion) and therefore largely held approximately 5,000 Twenty-Foot Equivalent Units (TEUs) apiece. Ships began to call the U.S. East Coast more often via the Suez Canal that year as well. Today, the Port of Savannah regularly sees ships holding over 14,000 TEUs with many more in the 8,000 – 11,000 TEU capacity range moving to the East Coast via both the expanded Panama and Suez Canals. The Port of Brunswick has seen a similar progression of change in the vessel fleet serving its facilities as well. These vessels require different considerations when it comes to safe navigation in and out of our channel compared to those that called on Savannah, Brunswick and other East Coast ports 13 years ago.

This assessment does not account for the conditions that determine the operational requirements to safely maneuver in the Savannah and Brunswick Harbors. A new, stricter speed rule risks exposing our ecosystem to potential worst-case scenario environmental impacts and/or loss of life. Therefore, any consideration of a rule requiring vessels to travel at an unsafe speed for the navigability of these vessels must take the safety of the mariner and the health of the estuary that we rely upon into account.

We believe every vessel subject to State or Federal pilotage must always operate at a safe speed. Factoring prevailing oceanographic, hydrographic and meteorological conditions, as well as the high profile (sail area) of the vast majority of ships calling Brunswick and Savannah, the minimum safe navigation speed is invariably well over 10 knots for all vessels, particularly for RO/RO vessels and deep draft container vessels. Therefore, we urge NOAA to eliminate the speed restrictions for commercial vessels while operating within a dredged entrance channel, similar to how vessels in Boston are managed. By eliminating the speed restrictions within those channels, the rule becomes much simpler for mariners to understand, and is easier to enforce.

Thank you for your consideration of our position on this important matter.

Sincerely,

Griff Lynch

Good Morning Dr. Good,

In reference to the email below from the Maritime Exchange.

We are a small crewboat service that has been operating in the Delaware Bay & nearby Atlantic Ocean since 1973 providing 24hr service to the Ship & Tug traffic in the area. We transport a wide array of customers to & from vessels offshore including the USCG, Delaware River Pilots, Interport River Pilots, Oil Spill Response personnel for the Delaware & Bay River Coop & Marine Spill Response Corporation just to name a few. Having been reprimanded by this rule once before I would like to add my 2 cents. While the rule targets all vessels under 65' maybe it should target vessel by draft as well... We have a 64' crewboat with a service speed of 24kts & a deep draft of 4.5' that falls under the restrictions however we have a 77' & 115' crewboat with service speeds of 20 & 23 kts but those vessels have a lighter draft of only 3.5'. While in my 32 years working the mouth of the Delaware Bay I have never seen a Right Whale, I understand that one day I may see one. However the restriction rule when looking at our fleet makes no sense, the bigger boats are restricted yet have a shallower draft thus less likely of a chance of an impact. Also worthy of noting is that a vessel are size in order to be under 10 kts requires both engines to only be at clutch ahead. When we are operating in adverse sea conditions of anything say over 3' we cannot maintain steerage at clutch ahead, it's virtually impossible & to be honest, quite unsafe.

Best Regards,

Dave

In 2013, NOAA Fisheries committed to publishing a report evaluating the conservation value and economic and navigational safety impacts of the 2008 right whale vessel speed regulations (50 CFR § 224.105). The report was finalized in June 2020 and evaluates four aspects of the right whale vessel speed rule: biological efficacy, mariner compliance, impacts to navigational safety, and economic cost to mariners. It also provides a detailed assessment of the rule's effectiveness, and assesses general trends in vessel traffic characteristics within Seasonal Management Areas over time.

The report and supporting materials are available on the NOAA website. Please pay close attention to the links Right Whale Vessel Speed Rule Assessment, June 2020 and Economic Analysis of North Atlantic Right Whale Ship Strike Reduction Rule for accurate depictions of current operating conditions or expenses.

Although the report is final, NOAA Fisheries is accepting written comments for consideration as they evaluate the need for future actions or modifications to vessel strike reduction efforts.

Please send any comments you may have to Dr. Caroline Good, Office of Protected Resources, at narw.vesselstrike@noaa.gov by March 5, 2021.

Dr. Good,

I apologize for the tardiness of my comment submission (b)(6) PII.

As one of the two Industry representatives on the Southeast Implementation Team, myself and Capt Kavanaugh, have attempted over the years, and hopefully succeeded, in getting our team to understand the difference in the bathymetry and federal channel designs between the ports south of Hatteras and those north.

The relatively deep and wide approaches to the Northeast ports allow room for error, thus, easier compliance to the Speed Rule. Vessels have more room to maneuver specifically when weather conditions are less than adequate. The wide northern fairways allow for two-way traffic, where here in the South, shallow conditions and fiscal constraints mandate these much narrower channels that extend well offshore. The majority of deep-draft vessels with wide beams call for one-way traffic until the vessels arrive in areas where two-way traffic can be done safely. This is generally not until these vessels arrive inside the river or bay. Vessels transiting these channels, particularly during the winter and early spring months, face beam winds, seas and swells during the outer channel transits.

Enclosed below is an NTSB Marine Accident report. Though it cites excessive speed as a contributing factor in this particular accident, it also recognizes the dangers and extreme caution that navigating narrow channels call for.

Should the agency consider any changes to the Speed Rule, the Jacksonville Marine Transportation Exchange urges you to maintain the speed deviation (provided in 50 CFR 224.1105) which permits professional mariners and Pilots to use their experience and informed judgement to determine what might be a safe speed when the vessel is in an area where oceanographic, hydrographic and/or meteorological conditions severely restrict the maneuverability of the vessel.

I appreciate your time in this matter and hope my late submission will help you understand the conditions our professional mariners face daily navigating these narrow offshore channels.

Dear Doctor Good,

The Charleston Pilots greatly appreciate our partnership with NOAA Fisheries' Southeast Region, and particularly Barb Zoodsma for her leadership in promoting dialogue and coordination amongst all stakeholders in our region. Through semiannual forums she directs, we are grateful for the many opportunities to discuss navigational safety issues to prevent unintended environmental consequences of North Atlantic right whale protective strategies. The comments herein summarize those presentations and dialogue, and are presented today in response to solicitation for comments on NOAA Fisheries Office of Protected Resources' report North Atlantic Right Whale (Eubalaena glacialis) Vessel Speed Rule Assessment, June 2020.

The success of the seasonal speed regulations in the reduction of fatal ship strikes is gratifying in that we are now assured progress to protect the species is attainable, and we agree the most effective strategies need to expand to achieve much greater success. We are particularly pleased with the cooperation between NOAA and mariners to promote safe navigation practices to protect the broader environment while diligent towards the protection of right whales.

A critical element of the vessel speed rule to avoid unintended consequences is the safety deviation in paragraph (c) of the regulation. We were once apprised in a meeting with NOAA officials who drafted the original regulation that the deviation for safe speed when ships are severely restricted was added to the rule because of a concern the Coast Guard raised specifically about the elevated risk of slow speed in the narrow channel dredged seaward of the jetties forming the entrance to Charleston Harbor. This channel is 800 feet wide at full depth, and is notoriously subject to cross set due to current and winds. The same phenomenon is the reason our two-mile long jetties were constructed, to stabilize the inlet in this dynamic environment. The applicability of the speed rule, coincidentally, begins where the jetties end, and therefore, where there is no longer protection from currents and winds inducing constant cross set on ships. The Coast Guard raised the specific concern that the only way to account for set in the Charleston entrance channel beyond the jetties, and thereby maintain safe navigation, was to maintain speed sufficient to allow a ship's rudder to be effective. At the time the Coast Guard raised the concern, typical ships trading in Charleston were 965 feet long by 106 feet wide. They are now often 1200 feet long by 160 feet wide.

When a ship is in a dredged channel, the fixed hydrographic conditions of the channel walls pose an ever-present severe restriction, and an exceedingly proximate grounding hazard. The deviation was added to the rule because it was recognized that a 965-foot ship confined to an 800-foot wide ditch under the surface is indeed severely restricted, and ships can only maintain heading and avoid a navigational accident if steerage is maintained. There is virtually no other common navigational scenario that the deviation clause, as written, has applicability other than in a dredged channel. The only "areas" within Seasonal Management Areas where ships are severely restricted by hydrographics, to the point of a potentially serious consequence, is when they are trying to stay away from the bank of a channel some 300 feet on either side, or when meeting another ship going the other direction, perhaps some 100 feet to the side. There is no other "area" within the geographic expanse of the codified Seasonal Management Areas where a ship should be only hundreds of feet from a physical obstacle, when operating normally, and therefore, no other area where hydrographic conditions pose a severe restriction to a ship in a normal condition on a normal route.

Here in Charleston, the total area of the dredged channel, i.e. an area where a hydrographic condition exists sufficient to severely restrict a vessel's maneuverability, is 2.6 square nautical miles. The Seasonal Management Area along the South Carolina coast extends several miles beyond the dredged channel, so the deviation clause is not, nor should it ever be, an exemption from the ten-knot speed requirement when not between the narrow walls of a dredged channel. These 2.6 square miles are distinctly different from the other 17,600 square miles of Seasonal Management Areas, and comprise, locally, the exceedingly small portion where the deviation due to hydrographics was intended to be applied.

Ships are rarely ever pointed exactly in the direction they intend to go in ocean conditions, which is completely unproblematic when surrounded by deep water. Between the jetties and inside the harbor, currents tend to align with the channel and do not induce cross set, except at confluences, but a dredged channel in the ocean is exposed to ocean conditions not confined to or defined by estuaries and man-made structures. This is why the entrance channel is so much wider than the harbor channels, despite handling the same sized vessels, because entrance channels in the ocean need to afford ships the width to steer against inherent cross currents. Ships are of course steered by rudders which work only when the propeller, which is always just forward of the rudder, creates enough flow over the rudder for it to be effective, and to also produce enough thrust to keep the ship moving forward despite the drag induced by the working of the rudder.

It is concerning that the report conflates a wide variety of navigational scenarios that do not pose severe hydrographic restrictions similar to dredged channels. The Straits of Gibraltar, the Santa Barbara Channel, and the shipping lanes in the Gulf of Saint Lawrence do not confine ships within physical obstructions as does a dredged channel only hundreds of feet wide. The ocean approaches beyond the headlands or jetties of the ports of Long Beach, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Hong Kong, and Auckland, do not have dredged channels subject to long shore effects of oceanographic influences with insufficiently shallow depths posing obstructions just hundreds of feet abeam. In the example of the Cape Cod Canal, the natural depth of Cape Cod Bay exceeds the project depth of the canal itself just 400 feet past the jetties on the east entrance, so ships entering the Cape Cod Canal are restricted by hydrographics while still in exposed waters for less than their overall length, and within that short distance, tidal currents align with the channel. In the Gulf of Panama, the dredged channel into the Canal is in the lee of islands and headlands. The features of ports presented as examples of successful speed rules in restricted waters would not qualify as areas where hydrographic conditions severely restrict the maneuverability of a vessel, because distances to shoal water in these naturally deepwater fairways in each example would be measured in thousands of yards, instead of hundreds of feet.

The report references a small portion of Federal research on the effects of slow speed, all of which definitively prove slow speed in a channel hundreds of feet wide exposed to ocean conditions is dangerous. The referenced 2019 study at the Army Corps laboratory in Vicksburg, MS, in which pilots from this organization participated, comprised four simulation runs in the Charleston entrance channel with the ship going ten knots and winds of 30 knots. In one of these runs, the simulator malfunctioned. Two runs resulted in groundings, and the fourth one missed grounding by only 40 feet. These simulations covered only four miles of the entrance channel, and the ships started the simulation perfectly lined up with no set, which is an unrealistic starting point because the ships would have been coping with cross set for several miles. The objective of that simulation project was to evaluate newly designed channel improvements throughout the port, and focused primarily on the harbor channels with 128 more runs, so the conclusions referenced are based on a project convened for another purpose.

The Army Corps of Engineers and the National Marine Fisheries Service have produced two other studies of slow speed navigation in Charleston's entrance channel which are not referenced in this report. In October, 2013, the same Army Corps of Engineers lab in Vicksburg conducted runs for the sole purpose of evaluating slow speed in our dredged entrance channel. The study simulated smaller ships (1138 feet long x 138 feet wide) than the 2019 study with only a 20-knot cross wind. Conclusions were that "crab" angles (the difference between the course the ship is trying to maintain and the actual heading of the ship) were predictably ten degrees when navigating at ten knots, and only five degrees when navigating at 16 knots. The additional crab angle resulted in doubling the additional width the ships would occupy moving through the channel, and at ten knots, two ships meeting would take up 85% of the total channel width, leaving only 50 feet between the ships and 50 feet on each side of the two ships to the channel walls. These margins of safety are far too small. The study also concluded, "Furthermore, ships traveling at slower speeds would have less time and maneuverability to recover from emergency situations (such as engine failure) that occur in real life."

Another study of navigation in the Charleston Entrance Channel by the U.S. Army Engineering Research & Development Center, and published for the National Marine Fisheries Service, Probabilistic Risk Assessment of Impact of Vessel Speed Restriction on Navigational Safety Analysis of Charleston Entrance Channel in November, 2014, concluded that the navigational precision a mariner could reasonably attain is substantially reduced at ten knots compared to normal safe speeds. The report further concludes “In situations such as those described here, rarely are simple answers or solutions readily at hand. An awareness and understanding of the attendant navigational safety risks is an important first step in continued efforts to move towards the future with greater clarity and deliberation on this matter.”

The third study we respectfully recommend for consideration is the Coast Guard investigation of the grounding of the Bahama Spirit in October, 2004 in the Charleston Entrance Channel. This ship was blown off course in 30 knots of wind while navigating at just over ten knots. The ship had a mechanical impairment, and it was only able to make this meager speed. The ship was fortunately loaded with an inert cargo of rocks and was able to jettison enough of it to refloat on the next high tide, before pounding seas breached the hull and created an environmental disaster.

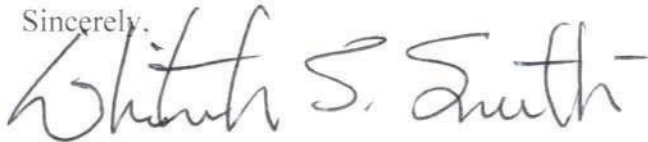

These three studies, only one of which the recent report references, and the case study of the Bahama Spirit conclude quite definitively that at 30 knots of wind, ships navigating at ten knots are operating at a negative margin of safety in the dredged Charleston Entrance Channel. The two studies that evaluated 20-knot winds concluded that normal navigational margins of safety are unattainable at ten knots.

The objective of navigational rules and regulations are to maintain optimal margins of safety, to seek out elements of risk, and to mitigate them no matter how severe they are. It is unfortunate the recent report implies that safe speed may be a non-compliant condition according to the speed rule. During a meeting with the NOAA officials directly involved in drafting the original rule, we asked how much of a reduction in the margin of safety is acceptable during Seasonal Management periods compared to the margin of safety normally attained the rest of the year. The answer was quite definitive that NOAA was not willing to accept any reduction in safety margins during Seasonal Management periods compared to normal operations. The deviation in the rule is not an exemption from practices to protect the environment from harm. It is a means to fulfill the obligation of mariners to protect the environment from harm.

The recent report correctly concludes that groundings and other navigational accidents have not increased over the last thirteen years when speed rule has been in effect. The broad conclusion from the three studies referenced above, the actual grounding of the Bahama Spirit, and the favorable incidence of groundings is that the risk of slow speed navigation in dredged ocean channels is well known, and the deviation has been uncompromisingly effective in managing that risk. The reason the deviation was added to the rule was to protect the very limited and finite areas where the hydrographics of a dredged channel severely restrict vessel maneuverability, and just as Doctor Valverde concluded, “In the case of the Charleston Harbor and the Entrance Channel speed restriction, policymakers are faced with a difficult set of tradeoffs involving a host of factors, including safety, environment, nature conservancy, and commerce. There can be little doubt that all of the stakeholders involved have a shared interest in ensuring that the system operates efficiently, while concomitantly sustaining human health, safety, and the environment.” Those trade-offs may not be so difficult after all. For thirteen years, masters and pilots have appropriately applied the deviation derived specifically to allow them to maintain normal margins of safety year-round, as NOAA officials apprised us is their intent.

Establishing safe speed as a compliant speed where ships are severely restricted has proven to eliminate an increased incidence of groundings over the lengthy thirteen seasons the rule has governed. The rule has also succeeded in significantly reducing the incidence of ship strikes on right whales. There is no evidence that the rule would have been more effective in reducing whale strikes without the deviation, but there is certain evidence that the deviation was absolutely effective in preventing slow speed groundings and collisions between ships sharing narrow channels. A logical conclusion of this report, after thirteen seasons of speed management, could be that the synchronized strategy of regulating ship speed when unrestricted distinctly from when restricted, has significantly benefited right whales while doing no harm. In terms of regulatory experience, that is a rare and resounding success.

Sincerely,

Re: Right Whale Speed Rule Assessment Comments

Dear Dr. Good,

Please accept these comments from the Brunswick Pilot Boat Corp regarding the proposed change to the Right Whale Speed Rule. We urge NOAA/NMFS to keep the speed deviation clause in place as written to preserve the safety of vessels that call upon the Port of Brunswick. We also strongly oppose the idea alluded to in the June 2020 Assessment of lowering the size of vessels to which the current speed restrictions apply.

Our fleet of pilot vessels provide launch services exclusively for a separate organization, the Brunswick Bar Pilots Association. These pilot boats were custom built for this purpose. We run from shore to sea – that is seaward of the dredged channels and into the open ocean, where large, deep draft vessels are able to maneuver, having ample “sea room” to create a safe lee for the pilot to embark (or disembark) by rope ladder up the sides of the ships. The ships slow down so the much smaller pilot boat can safely come alongside the large ship. This is done miles outside the dredged channel, because of the sea room required. This can be a dangerous maneuver, with a Pilot losing their life on average every year. After the Pilot has boarded the vessel, the vessel must increase speed before entering the narrow channel.

These small vessels are the minimum size vessels that can provide a safe platform to embark/disembark harbor pilots at sea in the Port of Brunswick because of prevailing meteorological and oceanographic conditions that typically exist during the fall/winter months. Often, a speed greater than 10 knots is required during transit to maintain heading or to keep up with a vessel that has also appropriately deviated on account of safety.

Please keep in mind that a secondary duty of these vessels is to remain near a piloted vessel and are utilized by the Pilots aboard large, oceangoing, deep draft vessels as a backup set of eyes and ears. Part of these duties is to run out ahead of a vessel, look out for other traffic (including whales), observe meteorological conditions along the route, and assist the Pilot in the discharge of duties. For example, the pilot boat will inform the inbound Pilot of fog in the harbor. Another important emergency function of the pilot boats is to serve as a “search and rescue” asset in the event a Pilot, pilot boat crewmember or a member of a ship’s crew falls overboard. This is, unfortunately an all too common occurrence. As such, it is vitally important that our pilot boats continue to be of appropriate size and power/speed to allow them to quickly respond to a manoverboard scenario and rescue the mariners in peril. Requiring these vessels to slow down, not remain near a vessel being piloted in the narrow confines of the channel would clearly be a reduction of safety. This reduction in safety could imperil not only the large, deep draft, oceangoing vessels, but also mariners in distress. A speed restriction will severely limit the pilot boats ability to safely support both the pilots and other mariners.

The pilot boat operates day and night in all weather conditions. Many times, in adverse weather conditions, a pilot boat will ride "in the lee" of a large vessel. Being able to ride in the lee while transiting the narrow confines of the dredged channel increases safety of the boat crew and the boat itself. Slow speed navigation will decrease maneuverability of the vessel and decrease safety for the captains and crew on board the pilot boat.

If these pilot vessels are required to operate at a less than 10 knots at sea, the operational effectiveness and the safety of the pilot vessel crew and the piloted vessel is diminished. Longer transit times for the passengers will no doubt increase fatigue and also serve to diminish safety here in the Port of Brunswick. The run time of the pilot boat will more than double causing major and unforeseeable delays and fatigue on the pilots, boat crews, tug boat captains, line handlers and other port users.

Re: Right Whale Speed Rule Assessment Comments

Dear Dr. Good,

Please accept these comments from the Brunswick Bar Pilots Association (“Pilots”). We are stakeholders and users of the Federal Project here in the Port of Brunswick, Georgia. As stakeholders and users of the waters of the Port of Brunswick, our organization is negatively impacted by slow speed navigation requirements.

It should be noted that NOAA has already observed that the Right Whale Speed Rule (the “Rule”) is working to reduce mortality as is at present, while at the same time permitting a lawful means for oceangoing vessels to deviate from the Rule as necessary on account of safety.¹ In other words, according to the NOAA Assessment, the current regulations in place are effective in BOTH protecting the Right Whale species and allowing professional mariners, such as state licensed pilots, to safely navigate larger and larger oceangoing vessels through confined offshore channels and safely in and out of port. We therefore oppose any changes to the speed restriction “deviation clause” and also oppose applying the speed restriction to vessels less than 65 feet in length (as the Assessment seems to imply).

As pilots serving the Port of Brunswick, we are charged to maintain a safe speed for every vessel subject to State or Federal pilotage regulations. It is, in fact, a requirement under international and U.S. law for vessels to maintain a “safe speed.”² Factoring prevailing oceanographic, hydrographic, and typical meteorological conditions, as well as the high profile (sail area) of the vast majority of ships calling Brunswick, the minimum safe navigation speed is invariably more than 10 knots for virtually all vessels, particularly high-profile RO/RO vessels and deep draft vessels.

The Federal Project in Brunswick is 500 feet wide on the entrance channel. On account of chronic underfunding for maintenance dredging, however, the “controlling width and depths” are significantly less than the 500 feet prescribed by Congress. In fact, even at full Project Dimensions, this channel is simply not a suitable width or design for slow speed navigation of large, deep draft oceangoing vessels. In addition, the true heading of the entrance channel is nearly perpendicular to the prevailing winds in fall and winter months.

² See Rule 6 of both the International and Inland Rules of the Road, which provides that “Every vessel shall at all times proceed at a safe speed take proper and effective action to avoid collision and be stopped within a distance appropriate to the prevailing circumstances and conditions.”

BRUNSWICK BAR PILOTS' ASSOCIATION, LLC.

8 GLYNN AVENUE
BRUNSWICK, GA 31520
912-280-9464

Moreover, it is during these times in particular that the strongest seasonal winds occur. This cross-wind, in combination with a narrow and chronically under-maintained Federal Project Dimensions, requires an upward speed “deviation” on every vessel transit in order to reduce the vessels’ “swept path” footprint. In other words, the aforementioned factors require a speed deviation to present most vessels from being swept out the channel and being run aground, which would cause an environmental disaster in many cases. History is replete with vessels driven aground then being broken apart by wave action and spilling cargo and bunker fuel into the sea.

It should be noted that using less than 10 knots will increase the swept path of the vessel, which materially decreases the available safety margin in the confines of a dredged navigation channel. In addition, at speeds below 10 knots, more counter rudder is required to hold a heading due to less laminar flow of seawater across the rudder surface. This reduction of laminar flow reduces control of the vessel, requires more helm angle, and imperils an otherwise safe vessel transit, and therefore human life and the natural environment. These are common navigational principles mariners have relied upon for centuries.

Deep draft vessels moving at slow speeds (less than 10 knots) also experience significant hydrodynamic effects of the narrow channel. These hydrodynamic pressures can be extreme and generally increase in magnitude the closer a deep draft vessel is to the sides of the channel. This, in combination with any wind effects, require the liberal use of counter rudder in order to control a vessel within the narrow confines of the channel. Again, these principles of ship handling are well known, and the inability to deviate upwards on speed when safety requires will materially reduce the safety of the vessel and natural environment when transiting a narrow dredged channel.

Deep draft vessels moving at slow speeds are also subject to the strong currents we experience in the Port of Brunswick. With a tidal range varying from six to ten feet, we experience tidal currents that at times have a velocity of 2.3 meters per second or greater. Significantly, these strong currents seldom run parallel to the dredged channel. They are cross currents and work to set transiting vessels outside of the channel. The vessels maintain channel position by the use of speed and rudder. Removing either one of these tools will cause the vessels to run aground. Clearly, slow speed navigation is a reduction on vessel safety on account of set and drift caused by tidal currents.

When vessels are of such deep draft that their transit times are restricted by tide, as is common, they must cross the narrow and shallow areas of the channel as rapidly as practicable in order to cross the reduced under-keel clearance areas quickly. This is because vessels are less directionally stable in areas of low under-keel clearance. The tool to cross the shallow areas quickly is speed. Reducing speed below 10 knots in such areas reduces the navigational safety of the vessel, and therefore of the natural environment.

The State Licensed Pilots in Georgia are charged with using their best skill and judgement to make prudent decisions about safety of the vessels, the crew aboard them, the natural environment, and the Port of Brunswick. Other factors such as economics or convenience do not factor in this equation. Increasing speed is for safety of the environment, the crew, and the vessel.

In closing, I want to reiterate that we support responsible efforts to protect the North Atlantic Right Whales. We also, however, oppose a change to the speed deviation rule; oppose dynamic or pre-notification for speed deviation on account of the fluid nature of shipping traffic and the ever present justification of need

COMMENTS OF THE AMERICAN PILOTS' ASSOCIATION ON THE NORTH ATLANTIC RIGHT WHALE (EUBALAENA GLACIALIS) VESSEL SPEED RULE ASSESSMENT NATIONAL OCEANIC AND ATMOSPHERIC ADMINISTRATION FISHERIES, OFFICE OF PROTECTED RESOURCES

March 25, 2021

Introduction

The American Pilots' Association (APA) submits the following comments on the "North Atlantic Right Whale (Eubalaena glacialis) Vessel Speed Rule Assessment" (Assessment), published in June 2020 by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) Fisheries, Office of Protected Resources.

APA has been the national association of professional maritime pilots since 1884. Virtually all of the more than 1,200 state-licensed pilots working in the coastal ports and approaches of the United States, as well as all of the U.S.-registered pilots operating in the Great Lakes system under authorization by the U.S. Coast Guard, belong to APA member pilot groups. These pilots handle well over 90 percent of all large ocean-going vessels moving in international trade in the waterways of the United States. The role and official responsibility of these men and women is to protect the safety of navigation and the marine environment on the waters for which they are licensed.

After providing some background on APA's past comments on NOAA's efforts to protect the North Atlantic Right Whales (NARW), including reiteration of an important recommendation APA made in 2013, these comments address two recommendations to the National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS) that are included in the Assessment. Specifically, we will offer comments on the recommendations for NMFS to consider (1) requiring "contemporaneous electronic notification" when a vessel's master/pilot makes the on-scene decision to "operate at a speed necessary to maintain safe maneuvering speed" and appropriately opts to use the deviation clause included in the 10 knot speed restriction regulations (see 50 CFR § 224.105(c)); and (2) applying the 10 knot speed restriction to vessels less than 65 feet.

As has been the case since APA first submitted comments on NOAA's strategy to reduce vessel strikes of NARWs nearly two decades ago, APA considers ourselves genuine partners in NOAA's efforts to protect and restore this species. Like the numerous comments on this topic that we have submitted to NOAA since 2002, the below suggestions are offered with sincere support for reasonable, effective and safe measures to protect the marine environment in general, and the NARW in particular.

Background Discussion and APA Recommendation

It should come as no surprise, given the many public comments APA has made on this subject over the years, that we continue to have navigational safety concerns about NOAA's insistence on imposing Seasonal Management Areas (SMA) with one-size-fits-all 10 knot speed restrictions on ocean-going vessels up and down the U.S. East Coast. These SMAs, where 10 knot speed restrictions are imposed annually from November to April, include areas encompassing offshore, narrow, federally-maintained dredged channels where two-way traffic and cross currents, seas and winds greatly impact safe navigation. These entrance channels, a number of which extend between 10 and 18 nautical miles offshore, are nearly perpendicular to the strong winds that are prevalent in the winter months (the very timeframe when NOAA's 10 knot speed restrictions are imposed).

It is in these off-shore, unsheltered, restricted channels – with the challenging combination of strong currents, confused winds, heavy vessel traffic, and close proximity to dangerous shoal waters – where state-licensed pilots ply their trade. In these waters pilots must be free to exercise their informed independent judgment, apply their superior local knowledge, maintain operational flexibility and have available the full-range of ship handling options in order to maximize navigational safety and protect the marine environment.

There are observations in the Assessment that some at NOAA appear to believe are surprising or cause for concern. The Assessment states that “OGVs [ocean going vessels] in channel entrances...entering southern ports under pilotage, represent an outsized proportion of vessels” using the speed deviation clause.¹ In this same section of the Assessment, it is also noted that “containerships...disproportionally operate at speeds in excess of 12 knots.”² These observations, however, should not be unexpected and actually reinforce the navigational safety arguments professional maritime pilots have been making for years.

While NOAA apparently views these observations as surprising or perhaps even an indication of something inappropriate, state-licensed pilots, who are charged with protecting the marine environment by safely navigating massive OGVs in confined offshore channels along the southern East Coast, are not at all surprised. In fact, to seasoned and highly skilled professional maritime pilots, the idea that greater maneuvering speeds would be required in these navigationally challenging areas, especially for vessels (like container ships and car carriers) with large sail areas, is seen simply as the most prudent course of action. Again, these pilots have a duty to the states that issue their licenses to use their skills and take all reasonable and necessary steps while piloting ships to protect the safety of navigation and marine environment.

It is precisely in these port approaches, with vessel traffic funneled together, narrow offshore channels and sea lanes, shoal waters, and challenging winds and currents, where pilots must exercise their independent judgment and apply their local expertise to ensure the optimal safe speed for a particular vessel is chosen. In these areas, it is common, especially in the winter months, that the “oceanographic, hydrographic and/or meteorological conditions severely restrict the maneuverability of the vessel,”³ so the use of the speed deviation clause will be required much of the time. The large “sail area” of the ever-growing fleet of commercial vessels calling at U.S. East Coast ports makes the need to invoke the speed deviation clause even more likely.

³ 50 CFR § 224.105(c)

Despite correctly noting that “there is insufficient data to draw any conclusions” regarding the speed restriction’s impact on vessel groundings, the Assessment goes on to state that “there is no indication that the vessel speed rule has negatively impacted navigation safety” within the SMAs.⁴ This latter statement, however, ignores the possibility that the very reason the speed restrictions may not have resulted in more vessel accidents or groundings is because large OGVs entering southern ports are using the speed deviation clause to ensure an appropriate and safe maneuvering speed is maintained.

Even though in 2014 NOAA rejected our recommendation⁵ that federally-maintained offshore dredged channels for ports from New York to Jacksonville be excluded from SMA speed restrictions and/or NOAA enforcement action, APA urges NOAA to reconsider its rejection of our proposal and exclude these dredged channels along the East Coast from the SMA speed restrictions and/or enforcement action. As we have stressed in the past, our suggestion is a reasonable and, in fact, very minor alteration to NOAA’s current SMAs.

The coordinates for these federal navigational channels are clearly shown on nautical charts, and described in various publications, produced by NOAA’s Office of Coast Survey. As we have stated before, the area of the channels APA is proposing for exclusion from the SMAs – encompassing the federally improved channels from New York to Jacksonville – is only 8.8 square miles⁶ out of more than 17,000 square miles of protected area...a tiny fraction of one percent of the entire protective area.

As we renew our call that the federally-improved offshore dredged channels along the East Coast be excluded from the SMAs and NOAA enforcement actions, we also supplement the recommendation by pointing out that NOAA could quickly establish a Dynamic Management Area (DMA) in any excluded offshore channel in the event NARWs are spotted.

Comments on Recommendations in the Assessment

We will now address some of the Assessment’s recommendations to NMFS. In particular, we will comment on the suggestions that NMFS should consider (1) requiring “contemporaneous electronic notification” by vessels invoking the speed restriction deviation clause; and (2) applying the NARW 10 knot speed restriction to vessels less than 65 feet.

⁶ When APA made our recommendation in 2013 to exclude federally improved offshore dredged channels from the SMA speed restrictions, the square mileage of these channels was 6.7 square miles. In the intervening 8 years, a number of the channels have been lengthened and now extend even further offshore in unprotected seas. The updated size of these channels is 8.8 square miles.

With respect to the Assessment's recommendation that "NMFS should investigate modifications to the regulatory language including possible contemporaneous electronic notification of safety deviations,"⁷ APA strongly opposes requiring "contemporaneous electronic notification" of an on scene shipboard decision to utilize the speed restriction deviation clause.

Under 50 CFR § 224.105(c)), the deviation clause can be invoked when "oceanographic, hydrographic and/or meteorological conditions severely restrict the maneuverability of the vessel." When such conditions exists, which as discussed above is routinely the case in many offshore channels along the East Coast, this is precisely the wrong time for the vessel's pilot and navigational bridge team to be distracted by the significant administrative burden that would certainly be associated with real-time reporting of the operational shipboard decision to use the deviation clause.

Furthermore, often it is not possible for the pilot to determine what speed may be necessary for a safe transit over the entire area to be piloted when he or she first boards a ship and conducts the Master-Pilot Exchange. A pilot may find it necessary to increase the vessel's speed on a moment's notice. Limiting a pilot's flexibility and ship handling options by requiring him or her to take the additional bureaucratic step of making a real-time notification to a shore side office worker, especially when he or she is trying to focus on navigating a large OGV in the most challenging waterways, is unwise and could certainly jeopardize navigational safety.

Finally, introducing this type of unnecessary distraction at a time when those responsible for directing the navigation of large OGVs are in the midst of making complex safety decisions is inconsistent with longstanding safety objectives of the National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB). Each year, the NTSB issues its "Most Wanted List of Transportation Safety Improvements." For the past decade or more, the NTSB has placed eliminating distractions at or near the top of its annual list.⁸ Regarding distractions, the current NTSB "Most Wanted List" states, "Distraction is a growing and life-threatening problem in all modes of transportation. All drivers, pilots, and operators need to eliminate distractions and stay focused on safely operating their vehicle, aircraft, vessel, or train."

Regarding the Assessment's apparent recommendation to apply the NARW speed restrictions to vessels substantially less than 65 feet,⁹ APA opposes this recommendation and stresses in the strongest possible terms that we believe this potential change to the regulations could be dangerous for our member pilots and the crews that operate their pilot boats. We understand that the purpose of these speed restriction regulations "is to reduce the likelihood of deaths and serious injuries to these endangered whales,"¹⁰ but we urge NOAA to be cautious that any changes to the speed regulations do not have the unintended consequences of increasing the likelihood of deaths and serious injuries to humans who earn their living on the water.

Due to the unique demands of piloting and administering a modern professional pilotage operation, pilot boats are special-purpose craft built for high speed operation. Pilot boats, many of which on the East Coast are just shy of 65 feet in length, must routinely operate in and among swirling winds and currents and near dangerous shoals and other hazards to navigation in order to deliver pilots to waiting or departing commercial vessels that are often great distances from shore.¹¹ These boats must approach moving vessels at speeds carefully calculated to bring the boat alongside the ship at the best possible angle and moment to facilitate what is, even in the most benign of conditions, a dangerous personnel transfer operation. In many instances, it would not be safe to operate in this type of environment at 10 knots or less. It would also not be safe for pilots or the pilot boat crews to venture 10-18 miles offshore, especially in the harsh elements of the winter months, on vessels smaller than 65 feet.

¹⁰ See www.fisheries.noaa.gov/national/endangered-species-conservation/reducing-vessel-strikes-north-atlantic-right-whales

In addition, pilot boat operations and corresponding boat characteristics have been carefully designed to minimize the travel time between ship and shore and between ships in order to prevent port congestion and delay from ships having to wait to embark or disembark a pilot. In this regard, state pilot oversight authorities and pilots' associations strive to maintain modern, safe, and efficient pilot systems.

More significantly, pilot groups have worked diligently with shipyards to design and build pilot boats – again, many of which are just over 64 feet long – that will operate at an optimal speed and be as comfortable as possible so as not subject pilots to long, pounding pilot boat transits that would significantly add to pilots' workload and fatigue. The dangers of mariner fatigue is another important factor addressed in the NTSB's "Most Wanted List." In fact, the NTSB made a recommendation to the States that oversee pilot systems to ensure that pilot organizations "implement fatigue mitigation and prevention programs."¹² Efforts by pilot associations to ensure pilot boats are constructed and operated in a manner that reduces and mitigates the dangerous impacts of fatigue are part of concerted efforts to comply with this NTSB's recommendation.

There are other reasons why reducing the size or speed of pilot boats could have other unintended consequences. See, for example, the below excerpt from the Brunswick Pilots comments on the Assessment,

A secondary duty of these vessels is to remain near a piloted vessel and are utilized by the Pilot aboard a large ocean going, deep draft vessel as a backup set of eyes and ears. Part of these duties is to run out ahead of a vessel, look out for other traffic (including whales), observe meteorological conditions along the route and assist the Pilot in the discharge of duties. Another important emergency function of pilot boats is to serve as a "search and rescue" asset in the event a pilot, pilot boat crewmember or a member of a ship's crew falls over board. This is, unfortunately an all too common occurrence. As such, it is vitally important that our pilot boats continue to be of appropriate size and power/speed to allow them to quickly respond to a man-overboard scenario and rescue the mariners in peril. Requiring these vessels to slow down, not remain near a vessel being piloted in the narrow confines of the channel would clearly be a reduction of safety.

Another, not insignificant factor that NOAA should consider when deciding whether to lower the threshold for when the SMA speed restrictions would apply is that pilot associations along the East Coast, in making significant decisions about investments in pilot boat equipment, have relied in good faith on the current NMFS speed restriction regulations. These pilot associations have carefully invested tens of millions of dollars in pilot boats that can not only meet the necessary and detailed operational requirements, but also comply with the size threshold provisions in the NMFS speed restriction regulations. Applying the speed restriction regulations to vessels smaller than 65 feet would not only potentially endanger pilots and pilot boat crews, but it would also unfairly subject these pilot associations to crippling financial penalties.

¹¹ In many ports along the East Coast, operational requirements dictate that pilot boats routinely venture more than 10 nautical miles offshore. In some East Coast ports, pilot boats must venture as far as 15 to 18 nautical miles offshore. These distances continue to grow as dredging projects extend the federally-improved channels even further offshore.

If NOAA has concerns about pilot boats striking a NARW, we are not aware of any recorded instances of such a strike by a pilot boat. Pilot boat operators are among the best trained small boat handlers in the world. They must routinely make split-second decisions to maneuver their boats in tight quarters next to mammoth ships in order to provide a stable platform for pilots to board and disembark ships. The men and women who operate and crew pilot boats are also trained to keep a sharp eye out for marine mammals – Right Whales in particular – and to remain well clear of this sea life. These professionally operated pilot boats are not a threat to the NARW.

We will close our discussion of the recommendation to reduce the size of vessels to which the SMA speed restrictions apply with a caution. If NMFS would amend its regulations to apply the NARW speed restrictions to vessels less than 65 feet, this would essentially force pilot associations into taking one of two unsafe actions. If the speed restrictions were to be applied to vessels less than 65 feet, pilot associations would be forced to either (1) routinely operate pilot boats that are too small at distances 10-15 miles offshore during the Winter months when the SMA 10 knot speed restrictions are in place, and endanger the lives of the pilots and pilot boat crews; or (2) operate existing pilot boats at suboptimal speeds, which increases both the risks associated with even routine pilot transfer operations and the likelihood pilots will become fatigued. We urge NOAA not to put pilots in a position to have to take either one of these unsafe courses of action.

Conclusion

APA and its nation-wide membership appreciates the opportunity to offer constructive comments on the NARW speed restriction Assessment. We again urge NOAA to implement our recommendation to exclude federally improved dredged offshore channels along the East Coast from SMA speed restrictions / enforcement actions, and to place a DMA over an excluded channel in which NARWs have been sighted. Also, for the reasons detailed above, we strongly oppose amending the SMA speed restriction regulations to require “contemporaneous notification” of an on scene decision to use the deviation clause and to apply the NARW speed restrictions to vessels less than 65 feet.

The Assessment notes the “positive effects the speed rule has had in reducing the number of serious injuries and mortalities of right whales,”¹³ and also highlights the fact that “overall compliance with the speed rule continued to improve.”¹⁴ We believe that if NOAA continues its public and maritime industry education efforts, implements APA’s recommendations and refrains from making unnecessary amendments (e.g., requiring “contemporaneous notifications” of use of the deviation clause and applying the speed restrictions to vessels less than 65 feet) to the speed restriction regulations, our shared objectives of protecting the NARWs and ensuring navigation and mariner safety can be accomplished.

Help Save Right Whales from Vessel Strikes in Calving Grounds

Michelle Lindsey <info@ropelessforrightwhales.com>

To: narw.vesselstrike@noaa.gov

I am writing to you to urge the NOAA to take immediate action to prevent future lethal vessel strikes for the critically endangered North Atlantic right whale.

Vessel strikes continue to be an urgent threat to right whales, particularly juveniles and calves. The devastating death of a new-born calf is the third right whale calf in just over one year that has died due to vessel collision and injuries from propeller strike. These deaths are gruesome, tragic, and preventable.

We cannot afford another death in our calving grounds, or during the whale's migration along the east coast to critical feeding grounds.

The Ship Strike Reduction Act of 2008 has dramatically lowered right whale deaths from large ship collisions but has done nothing to prevent deaths from smaller vessels that are exempt from the 10-knot speed restriction (those 65ft and below). NOAA's own assessment of the rule shows that voluntary vessel slowdowns are not effective.

Instead, we must expand speed restrictions to all vessels in the right whale critical habitats, especially to vessels in the right whale calving grounds.

Please call on NOAA to require mandatory slowdowns in areas where right whales are present.

Thank you.

Michelle Lindsey

Dear Ms Good, I live here on the Florida Coast. I have a genuine love and greatest passion for all the whales. I love the northern right whales and know that they are greatly endangered. I recently heard "Milipede" and her calf made it safely to Massachusetts. But heard the mother and calf near ST Augustine Florida were struck by a boat and the calf suffered head injury and died. I was heartbroken and cried when i heard. I understand that the boat who struck the calf was under size limit for the speed travelling but the mother was injured and the calf still died. I cannot stress it enough how sad it is when we hear of a calf who has died and also decreasing greatly the chances of the Northern Right Whales population. Please do whatever in your power necessary to protect the mother and calves and mandate lower speed limits, no matter what size the boat, regulations need to be updated to protect the whales here on our Coast. Thank you Lisa Fike

With fewer than 370 North Atlantic right whales left in the world, we have to make sure they have safe places to live. Sadly, accidents with vessels (boats and ships) continue to threaten the survival of this species. I am asking you to do everything in your hands to prevent any more whales from being injured or killed as the result of vessel strikes.

Along with the accidental entanglements in fishing gear, these incidents are preventing the recovery of this critically endangered species.

I write in response to the delayed report, North Atlantic Right Whale (Eubalaena glacialis) Vessel Speed rule Assessment, dated June 2020 but only just released in January of 2021.

Without further action, we risk losing a species which is steeped in our history, our culture, and our own survival. Research demonstrates that right whales play an important ecological role by helping to sustain our marine ecosystem and our planet. I am encouraged that the agency acknowledges that the current suite of measures, in particular those which are voluntary, do not adequately protecting right whales in US waters.

I support the following findings in the report:

- Seasonal Management Areas should be modified in duration, seasonality, and location
- Further actions should include vessels under 65 feet in length.
- The Dynamic Management Area program should be modified as it does not reduce vessel strike risk substantially as a voluntary measure.
- Additional outreach and education to the boating and shipping community is needed.

The inclusion of vessels under 65 feet is not only important to right whales but is also an important measure for human safety. Just last year, a newborn right whale was struck twice by a small vessel, the second strike mercifully killing the whale who suffered mortal wounds from the initial impact. Small vessels involved in whale strikes have also suffered cracked hulls, damage to propellers and rudders, and blown engines. Passengers have been knocked off their feet or thrown from the boat upon impact with a whale.

I ask that you consider, at a minimum, the measures put forward in the 2020 petition for rulemaking submitted by Conservation Law Foundation et al. including:

- extend vessel speed restrictions to vessels under 65 feet (19.8 meters)
- require mandatory vessel speed restrictions in all Dynamic Management Areas, and strengthen the trigger for Dynamic Management Areas to include any sighting of a cow/calf pair
- expand the Seasonal Management Area outside the ports of New York and New Jersey to 40 nautical miles, effective year-round, with dynamic vessel speed restrictions in areas of designated Traffic Separation Schemes
- expand the Block Island Seasonal Management Area to the east, and make the Seasonal Management Area effective year-round
- expand the Seasonal Management Area off Virginia out to 45 nautical miles
- expand all other Mid-Atlantic and Southeast Seasonal Management Areas out to 30 nautical miles
- combine the Off Race Point and Cape Cod Bay Seasonal Management Areas into a single management area effective January 1 through May 15
- maintain all other vessel speed restrictions not specifically revised as requested to prevent further mortality and injury resulting from incidental vessel strikes.

North Atlantic right whales can recover if the accidental threats posed by human activities are adequately reduced. Please give this species and our planet a chance to thrive by implementing meaningful measures based on the most current and best available science.

Sincerely,

Edivaldo Gonzalez,

MARINE MAMMAL COMMISSION

26 March 2021

Dr. Caroline Good
Office of Protected Resources
National Marine Fisheries Service
1315 East-West Highway, 13th Floor
Silver Spring, Maryland 20910

Dear Dr. Good:

The Marine Mammal Commission (the Commission) continues to be extremely concerned about the status of the North Atlantic right whale (Eubalaena glacialis), and commends the National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS) on its efforts to evaluate the effectiveness of the various measures and programs in place to reduce serious injury and mortality of the species. These efforts, including the current evaluation of the effectiveness of the 2008 vessel speed rule and the identification of areas for improvement, are necessary to address the alarming decline of the right whale population that has occurred since 2010. The Commission, in consultation with its Committee of Scientific Advisors, has reviewed the June 2020 “North Atlantic Right Whale (Eubalaena glacialis) Vessel Speed Rule Assessment” report (the report), and provides the following comments and recommendations.

NMFS implemented a vessel speed rule (the rule) (73 Fed. Reg. 60173) in 2008 to mitigate the risk of vessel strikes to North Atlantic right whales along the U.S. East Coast. The rule required vessels 65 feet and longer to transit designated areas at a speed of 10 knots or less. NMFS designated ten seasonal management areas (SMAs) between Massachusetts and Florida, with seasonally active periods reflecting right whale habitat use throughout the year. SMA designation was informed by data on right whale distribution and vessel traffic. NMFS also implemented a voluntary dynamic management area (DMA) program. When right whale foraging aggregations of three or more individuals are observed outside the boundary of an active SMA, a DMA is established for 15 days. Vessels are asked to transit the DMA at a speed of less than 10 knots or to avoid the area. Vessels less than 65 feet in length (small vessels) are not subject to the speed rule in either SMAs or DMAs.

Background

The report reviews and synthesizes many aspects of the effectiveness of the vessel speed rule, including the increasing use of speed limits to protect whales in other parts of the United States and around the world, volume of traffic and regulated vessel compliance with speed regulations in SMAs and DMAs, volume of non-regulated small-vessel traffic, effectiveness of the rule in reducing the number of serious injuries and deaths, vessel sizes involved in strikes of right whales, navigational safety, economic impacts, enforcement, and outreach.

Encouragingly, mariner compliance with SMA regulations increased from 53 percent soon after implementation of the rule, to 81 percent during 2018-2019. However, much lower levels of compliance in the Southeast,¹ especially by large ocean-going vessels in port entrance areas,² are a cause for considerable concern. The rule allows for deviations from the speed restrictions due to safety concerns, but the navigational safety assessment concluded that the lack of compliance by ocean-going vessels in port entrance channels was likely not due to, or justified by, safety deviations. Groundings have not increased since the rule was enacted, and, at the Charleston, SC entrance channel, for example, conditions requiring increased speeds for safety reasons were rare; only 13 percent of transits involved two-way Post-Panamax traffic and fewer than 3 percent of wind speed observations exceeded 30 knots. Although there was some evidence of vessels slowing during transits through the North Carolina to Georgia SMA, it is clear that there has been minimal attention to, or compliance with, the speed rule in that SMA.

The report documented a decline in right whale deaths from 10 in the ten years immediately before implementation to four whales in the ten years immediately following implementation, but an increase in serious and non-serious injuries from two to four and 13 to 24, respectively. The report also documented an increase in vessel strikes of other large whale species since the rule was implemented, although it states that the increase may have been partly the result of increased surveillance and reporting, as well as an increase in the humpback whale population (leading to an increased vessel-whale encounter rate). Vessel strikes have continued to occur in the Northeast, despite relatively high compliance with SMA regulations. Although the rule places speed restrictions only on vessels greater than 65 feet in length (large vessels), which are assumed to represent the greatest threat, Knowlton and Costidis (2013) found that between 1999 and 2012, at least 11 vessel strikes of right whales (61 percent of cases analyzed) were by small vessels.

Prompt revision of the vessel speed rule

The assessment of the vessel speed rule clearly demonstrates deficiencies in several aspects of the rule and its implementation that need to be rectified urgently to further reduce risk to right whales. While known vessel-strike deaths decreased following the implementation of the rule, this may not represent a truly declining mortality rate; the large majority (64 percent) of right whale deaths are cryptic (i.e., undetected or unreported) and the number of known deaths is a very poor predictor of total deaths (Pace et al. 2021). In addition, serious and non-serious injuries from vessel strikes have been increasing. The sub-lethal effects of vessel strikes are still largely unknown but likely have significant impacts on the health of individuals and potentially on the population's ability to recover. It is also clear that documented compliance levels are far from adequate, particularly for ocean-going vessels in the Southeast, where the considerable risk to right whales, especially pregnant females migrating south and mothers with their newborn calves on the calving grounds and during their migration north, remains. In light of the ongoing and alarming right whale population decline since 2010, and the areas for needed improvement that are clearly identified in the report, the Commission recommends that NMFS proceed directly to rulemaking to address identified inadequacies and improve vessel-strike protections for North Atlantic right whales. We include recommendations for specific improvements below.

¹ E.g., 69 percent in the North Carolina to Georgia SMA

² E.g., only 13 percent off Brunswick, GA

Modify SMAs

The Commission concurs with NMFS's recommendation to modify existing SMAs and establish new ones. Given what is known about changing right whale distribution in response to climate change and predicted changes in vessel traffic and prey distribution in the Northeast as offshore wind energy industrial development continues, the temporal and spatial extent of existing SMAs needs to be reassessed, and a comprehensive analysis of DMAs is needed to inform expansion of current SMAs and the designation of new SMAs. Figure 51 in the report depicts a subset of DMAs declared between 2010 and 2019. Based on this figure, the Commission recommends that a new SMA be established south of Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket, and that areas in the Gulf of Maine which historically have had the largest numbers of DMA designations (e.g., near Jeffreys Ledge) also be considered for designation. Fewer but larger SMAs rather than many smaller areas would likely be preferable to the shipping industry. Other options to consider in future rulemaking should include expanded or additional mandatory ship reporting (MSR) areas, as well as reconsideration of the 10-knot speed threshold (Kelley et al., 2020). The Commission agrees on the need to assess how to further reduce vessel-strike risk in Cape Cod Bay, and recommends reassessment of risk on the calving grounds, given that one serious injury and one calf death due to a vessel strike have occurred during the past two years.

Enhance Monitoring and Enforcement

Although the relatively high overall compliance with SMA speed restrictions (81 percent) is encouraging, improvements have ceased and compliance in the Southeast remains poor. Excessive speeds of ocean-going vessels approaching and departing ports in the Mid-Atlantic and Southeast regions are of great concern because of the presence of migrating right whales and mother-calf pairs on the nursery grounds. A 2019 U.S. Army Corps of Engineers study cited in the report and a more recent Maritime Whale AIS (Automatic Identifications System) analysis (Lang et al. 2020) make it clear that the excessive speeds documented outside Mid-Atlantic and Southeast ports indicate a disregard for the speed restrictions, and are not due to safety concerns. The Commission concurs that methods to document safety deviations with verifiable data should be explored and that targeted enforcement and outreach to the industry and pilots should be undertaken, and recommends that NMFS coordinate with Transport Canada on vessel speed requirements, modifications, and lessons learned.

The Commission supports real-time monitoring, analysis, and compliance reporting for ports of concern when SMAs are in effect. An example of such work is that being undertaken by the Rhode Island Marine Animal Support (RIMAS) Maritime Whale project, initially at the Block Island Seasonal Management Area, and recently at the ports of Charleston, SC and Savannah, GA. Real-time monitoring data should be provided to enforcement agents, port authorities, and pilot associations. This will increase awareness of whale presence and vessel-strike risk, and will support a needed increase in enforcement and issuance of citations. Increased funding for outreach, right whale monitoring, ship surveillance, and enforcement would significantly aid these efforts.

Significantly Increase Outreach and Communication

The Commission commends the numerous outreach efforts by NMFS and its partners to promote mariner awareness, cooperation, and compliance, but agrees that more needs to be done to increase compliance with, and effectiveness of, the vessel speed rule. Currently, operators using multiple ports are subjected to observation and enforcement in some ports but not in others with equally or more stringent vessel speed limits. Like motorists cognizant of the presence of motor vehicle speed enforcement zones and cameras, shipping companies, vessel operators, and port pilots are aware of where SMAs and DMAs are and where enforcement is strict or lax, so they likely slow down when the risk of being caught is high. In addition to the obvious need for stepped-up enforcement, voluntary programs, which rely on report cards and corporate responsibility incentives and have been effective and well-received by the shipping industry, should be further employed. NOAA (National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration) and NMFS offices lead or partner in several of these programs. The Commission recommends that NOAA expand the reach of these programs to more ports, increase the communication between ports to standardize the use of compliance “report cards” for all operators, and consider consolidating the corporate responsibility programs at U.S. ports into one program. Specifically, the East Coast’s Right Whale Corporate Responsibility Project could be expanded to all ports on the East Coast, beginning with the ports in the Mid-Atlantic. The West Coast’s Protecting Blue Whales and Blue Skies program provides financial and public relations incentives to shipping companies that comply with voluntary speed limits, and has had success implementing reduced speed regulations that provide increased protection of whales from vessel strikes as well as reduced emissions that decrease air pollution. Similar to New York and New Jersey’s Clean Vessel Incentive, NMFS could work with other federal and state authorities on the East Coast to use speed restrictions to reduce vessel-strike risk to right whales, to meet emission standards that reduce pollution, and/or to consolidate greenhouse gas controls into a single corporate responsibility program.

Targeted outreach efforts toward small-vessel operators should also be implemented, regardless of whether speed rules are applied to smaller vessel classes. Awareness of whale presence and risk of vessel strike should prompt recreational mariners to operate more safely. Inclusion of all vessel operators in NMFS’s SMA email distribution list and widespread promotion of the Whale Alert app would be a starting point.

Evaluation and management of all aspects of implementation of the vessel-speed rule is supported by the survey and monitoring efforts of Federal, state, and non-governmental scientific institutions along the U.S. eastern seaboard. The Commission commends these groups for providing real-time sightings and effort data in a comprehensive display to inform managers and the public, and appreciates the risks involved in conducting this important work. During aerial surveys to monitor whale presence, field crews identify aggregations that trigger DMA implementation, and rapidly communicate whale-sighting locations through email distribution lists and other means. Access to information in real-time has proven essential to our understanding of seasonal, annual, and long-term whale distribution and movements. The Commission strongly encourages continued and strengthened support for these efforts and for enhanced communication between regions. Rapid sharing of aerial survey reports allows real-time response to whale presence in the form of alerts to operators of vessels of all sizes, enforcement, and media stories to raise public awareness.

Address Vessel-Strike Risk from Small Vessels

The data presented in this report show that strikes of right whales by small vessels can result in serious injury and death, in addition to creating the potential for long-lasting negative effects from injuries that have been classified as “non-serious”. As noted above, between 1999 and 2012, a minimum of 11 right whale vessel strikes (61 percent of cases analyzed) were by small vessels, and at least two calf deaths have been attributed to small vessels in recent years. Further, the injury risk to humans is also greater on small vessels. The report, documenting the behavior of AIS-equipped small vessels,³ found that in New England small vessels were traveling at speeds less than 10 knots in 83 percent of SMA transits, in the Mid-Atlantic in less than 50 percent, and in the Southeast 55-74 percent.

In light of these findings, the Commission recommends that NMFS expand speed restrictions to small vessels, especially in Southeast SMAs with right whale calving habitat, where the presence of small vessels and the behavior of females and their calves puts the whales at greater risk. In addition, the Commission recommends that NMFS review the example of state-level speed restrictions in place for small vessels in Massachusetts waters and consider their applicability to other regions.

Regulation, monitoring, and enforcement of small vessels is challenging but it is inescapable that they cause right whale deaths and serious injuries. Given the increase in affordability of AIS technology and its increasing use on small vessels, the Commission recommends that NMFS consult with the U.S. Coast Guard as it considers requiring AIS on Class III (40-65 feet in length), and potentially Class II (26-40 feet in length) vessels, operating in North Atlantic right whale SMAs.

Modify or Terminate the DMA Program

The report illustrates the nearly complete lack of compliance with the voluntary DMA speed regulations, and suggests that the low level of cooperation by mariners is preventing the significant risk reduction that the DMAs were designed to provide. While compliance in these areas may be low, the DMA program still alerts mariners to areas with recurring right whale presence, and therefore, the Commission concurs with NMFS's recommendation to modify, not terminate, the DMA program. Specifically, the Commission urges NMFS to consider making speed restrictions in DMAs mandatory, and increase monitoring frequency, which could allow for DMAs to be smaller and more mobile. Expanded use of acoustic technology to trigger DMAs could enhance the agency's ability to designate protective areas in a timely manner. Similarly, given the high-risk behavior of mothers and calves described in the report, as well as the high conservation value of breeding females, NMFS should consider expanding DMA declaration triggers to include presence of even just one mother-calf pair.

The Commission appreciates the opportunity to work closely with NMFS on the issue of preventing vessel strikes of large whales. The Commission's research grant program has funded several projects in recent years focused on vessel-strike reduction on the east and west coasts. We will continue to provide additional recommendations and input on this issue and look forward to continued dialog between our agencies on the issue of reducing vessel speeds and vessel-strike risk. We welcome the opportunity to meet in the near future as NMFS considers options for revising and strengthening the rule. In this context, the Commission is interested in exploring a workshop with east-coast and west-coast experts from the U.S. and Canada that would address vessel-strike issues, the design of SMAs and DMAs, communication and outreach, and public-private partnerships with the involved industries.

³ Currently, AIS is not required for vessels less than 65 feet in length.

Dear Dr. Doremus,

The Atlantic Scientific Review Group (ASRG) met via webinar on February 22–24, 2021 during which we received a presentation from Dr. Caroline Good (Office of Protected Resources) on the “North Atlantic Right Whale (Eubalaena glacialis) Vessel Speed Rule Assessment” which evaluates the conservation value and economic and navigational safety impacts of the 2008 North Atlantic right whale vessel speed regulations (50 CFR § 224.105).

The ASRG commends NOAA for preparation of its “North Atlantic Right Whale (Eubalaena glacialis) Vessel Speed Rule Assessment.” We continue to support the use of speed restrictions to reduce lethal vessel strikes which are responsible for at least one-quarter of observed Serious Injuries and Mortalities for North Atlantic right whales. We are particularly troubled by the lack of compliance with speed restrictions in the Southeast and Mid-Atlantic, and with the lack of restrictions on vessels under 65 feet in length. In this regard, we suggest that NOAA consider new rulemaking to address these issues, and consider supporting this rulemaking by modeling the risk reduction of alternatives using a modified version of NOAA’s Decision Support Tool. A variety of alternatives or scenarios should be considered as part of this including:

1. Spatial/temporal non-voluntary speed restrictions ranging from:
 - a. A single speed restriction for the entire U.S. Northwest Atlantic Ocean shelf at a speed that could be modeled to achieve the necessary risk reduction;
 - b. Expanded Seasonal Management Areas (SMAs) reflecting a combination of the original SMAs coupled with additional SMAs for areas of recently observed high right whale abundance south of Block Island to Nantucket Island as well as areas in the Mid-Atlantic which have had frequent Dynamic Management Areas; and

- c. Status quo (the existing SMAs and the historical pattern of DMAs) for comparison, recognizing that this option is clearly inadequate.
2. Maximum 10-knot speed requirement on all vessels under these spatial/temporal restrictions versus status quo of maximum 10-knot speed limit only for vessels greater than 65 feet (we note that a speed restriction on smaller vessels also improves safety for vessel operators).
3. A scenario considering how continued climate instability might affect the pattern of DMAs.
4. Effects of increased vessel traffic in support of windfarm construction and maintenance.

With respect to the recommendations of the report, the ASRG strongly supports:

1. An expansion of the current SMAs (in particular to include the areas from south of Block Island to Nantucket Island).
2. A continuation of the use of the DMA tool but with the change that these be required (rather than voluntary) 10-knot speed restrictions. We further suggest that NOAA investigate “frameworking” this regulation (as is the case with many Magnuson Act regulations) to facilitate the speed of implementation of any DMA closure.
3. Require all vessels within an SMA or DMA to conform to the 10-knot speed restriction.

Finally, we support both research recommendations within the report. We also suggest that NOAA develop a tool similar to the North Atlantic right whale Decision Support Tool that can be used to support vessel strike reduction analyses throughout the US EEZ.

The ASRG thanks NOAA staff for their continued high-quality marine mammal science, for their presentation at our meeting, and for their responsiveness to our many questions.

Dear Dr. Good,

The Maine Department of Marine Resources (ME DMR) submits the following comments on the North Atlantic Right Whale (Eubalaena glacialis) Vessel Speed Rule Assessment. ME DMR agrees with the National Marine Fisheries Service's (NMFS) assessment that additional action is warranted to further reduce the mortality/serious injury (M/SI) of right whales resulting from vessel strikes. Speed restrictions are a critical tool to reduce vessel strikes. As a result, ME DMR strongly recommends NMFS undertake regulatory action to modify the existing vessel speed rules.

ME DMR is encouraged to see NMFS complete an assessment on the efficacy of existing vessel speed measures. While entanglements and vessel strikes are cited as the two primary sources of human-caused right whale mortality, recent regulatory action has exclusively focused on the Northeast trap/pot fishery. As evidenced in the draft Biological Opinion, action by US federal fisheries alone is not enough to change the trajectory of the right whale population. Reductions in M/SI from other human-caused sources, such as vessel strikes, are needed to lessen the outsized burden on US federal fisheries to reduce risk to right whales.

The Assessment finds that, while the number of right whale mortalities resulting from vessel strikes has decreased since the vessel speed rules were implemented in 2008, the total number of vessel strikes has increased. Specifically, since implementation of the vessel speed rule there have been 32 vessel strikes, 8 of which resulted in M/SI and 24 which caused sub-lethal injuries. This increase in the total number of vessel strikes is concerning because sub-lethal impacts from vessel strikes can result in internal injuries, the severity and frequency of which are impossible to determine. The Assessment also concludes that vessels strikes have a greater impact on female right whales and calves given these two demographics spend more time at the surface. This trend is distressing given the lower proportion of females within the right whale population, and the decreased calving rates since 2010.

In response, the Assessment outlines a series of recommendations to strengthen the vessel speed rules. The first is to update the location of Seasonal Management Areas (SMAs). ME DMR strongly supports this recommendation. Given the well documented shift in right whale distribution since 2010, the existing SMAs, which were implemented in 2008, are outdated. This is most obvious south of Nantucket where there is a consistent aggregation of right whales, frequent declarations of Dynamic Management Areas (DMAs), but no SMA. As a result, NMFS needs to quickly undertake rulemaking to revise the location of SMAs to reflect the location of right whales post-2010. ME DMR considers this to be the most important recommendation in the Assessment.

A second recommendation is to either eliminate or strengthen the existing DMA program. ME DMR is disappointed, but not surprised, to see that voluntary measures have resulted in low rates of cooperation. That said, ME DMR does find value in the DMA program as it is one of the few regulatory tools NMFS has to quickly identify, and respond to, changes in the location of right whales. ME DMR suggests the existing DMA program could be strengthened by developing a trigger mechanism which prescribes the transition of consistently declared DMAs into SMAs overtime. For example, a trigger could be developed such that if a DMA in the same area and similar time is declared two years in a row, the DMA transitions to a SMA in the third year. A pre-established method to strengthen vessel speed measures is necessary given the changing distribution of right whales, and the slow process by which regulatory changes to the vessel speed rules are propagated.

The third recommendation in the Assessment is to consider expanding the SMA speed restrictions to smaller vessels (<65 ft). The Assessment finds that small vessels were involved in at least 11 vessel strikes between 1999 and 2012, one of which occurred off the coast of Georgia and another which occurred in Cape Cod Bay. Differences in current vessel speeds based on region and vessel type make the conversation surrounding regulations for small vessels complex. This complexity is compounded by the fact that in some areas right whales aggregate for feeding or calving while in other regions they are primarily transiting. Specifically, in the Northeast region the Assessment finds over 80% of small vessel traffic in the SMAs already transits at speeds less than 10 knots; this percentage drops to less than 50% in the Mid-Atlantic. Further, the Assessment notes that almost 100% of sailing vessels and over 85% of fishing vessels traveled at speeds less than 10 knots while well over 50% of pleasure and 85% of pilot vessels exceeded speeds of 10 knots. If NMFS pursues speed restrictions for smaller vessels, these trends, as well as the primary activity of right whales in different regions, should inform potential regulatory changes as well as concentrated outreach and enforcement activities. Further, as a part of any potential rulemaking on small vessels, NMFS should conduct broad stakeholder engagement to inform future regulations and increase education along the coast.

The fourth recommendation is for increased enforcement and outreach regarding vessel speed restrictions. ME DMR strongly supports this recommendation as a part of a larger package to reduce the incidence of vessels strikes. It is clear from the Assessment that certain sectors and regions have poorer compliance with existing vessel speed rules. These include lower rates of compliance in the North Carolina to Georgia SMA (69.49% between 2018-2019), low rates of compliance from pleasure vessels (31% between 2018-2019), and a high total distance of non-compliance from container vessels (~30,000 nautical miles above 12 knots between 2018-2019). There is also exceptionally low compliance for ocean going vessels at several port entrances, with just over 10% of total distances travelled at the ports of Wilmington, Charleston, and Brunswick under 10 knots. It is unclear if this lack of compliance is due to acute safety concerns, lack of education, or disregard. ME DMR acknowledges that tides, wind speed, and sea state can all compromise the ability for vessels to safely maneuver. That said, the Assessment provides little evidence of acute safety concerns, with an in-depth review of the Charleston channel entrance showing only a specific set of conditions (two-way traffic and high wind speeds) necessitating speeds above 10 knots. Further, the Assessment concludes that the incidence of maritime groundings has decreased in SMAs since the implementation of the vessel speed rule, suggesting no reductions in navigational safety.

Given these variable levels of compliance, enforcement and education efforts need to focus on these regions and vessel categories which have consistent patterns of speeds above 10 knots. Speed restrictions are one of the most effective tools to reduce vessel strikes; however, if the measures are not being enforced or complied with, the strength of the measures is significantly undermined. Educational efforts, particularly in areas of low compliance, also represent an opportunity to better understand if severe and consistent safety concerns are present, and how frequently vessels traveling at speeds above 10 knots are invoking the safety deviation versus operating out of compliance. ME DMR highlights that outreach and enforcement should not be the sole means of reducing M/SI from vessels strikes. As noted above, a re-evaluation of the location of existing SMAs must be a top priority; this can easily be combined with stakeholder outreach.

Given the condition of the right whale population and the severity of measures facing US federal fisheries, ME DMR strongly recommends NMFS responds to this Assessment by swiftly initiating regulatory action to modify the existing vessel speed rules. Further, ME DMR highlights the importance of quantifying any expected reductions in M/SI from these regulatory changes as soon as possible. Within the recently released draft Biological Opinion, there are two evaluation periods to consider reductions in other sources of right whale M/SI, such as US vessel strikes: 2023-2024 and 2025-2026. If NMFS does not begin immediate action to quantify the impact of strengthened vessel speed rules, any expected reductions in M/SI may not be incorporated into these evaluation periods. This would have direct negative impacts on US federal fisheries. Given the slow speed of regulatory action, waiting until the issuance of a final rule to calculate associated reductions in the M/SI from vessels strikes will be too late.

In conclusion, ME DMR supports NMFS finding that future action is necessary to reduce the incidence of vessel strikes in US waters. During the comment period on this Assessment, a right whale calf was struck and killed by a vessel in the Southeast. This makes three right whale calves killed or seriously injured by vessel strikes in the last two years. It appears there is an unfortunate pattern emerging in the Southeast where calves are particularly prone to vessel strikes. NMFS must consider this trend when strengthening the vessel speed rules. If, as the Assessment suggests, calves are vulnerable to vessel strikes, more expansive protections against vessel strikes are needed in the calving grounds.

Sincerely,

RE: Comments of the Maine Lobstermen's Association on Right Whale Vessel Speed Rule Assessment

Dear Dr. Good:

The Maine Lobstermen's Association ("MLA") provides these written comments in response to the National Marine Fisheries Service's ("NMFS") request for comments on the June 2020 Right Whale Vessel Speed Rule Assessment (the "Assessment") to inform NMFS's evaluation of the "need for future actions or modification to address [its] vessel strike reduction efforts."¹ The MLA appreciates NMFS's consideration of these comments.

The MLA was founded in 1954 and is the oldest and largest fishing industry association on the east coast. The MLA advocates for a sustainable lobster resource and the fishermen and communities that depend on it. The MLA engages in advocacy, education, stewardship and sustainable resource management, collaborative research, and cultural exchange. For more than 65 years, the MLA has ably represented the interests of the Maine lobster industry and educated the public, regulators, and elected officials about the importance of this industry. The Maine lobster fishery generates more than $1.5 billion annually in sales and distribution supply chain revenue to the region's economy,² and is made up of a diverse collection of small businesses that are located in small, rural communities.

² Michael Donihue, Lobsters to Dollars: The Economic Impact of the Lobster Distribution Supply Chain in Maine, at 1, 3, 12 (June 2018), www.colby.edu/economics/lobsters/Lobsters2DollarsFinalReport.pdf.

The MLA is committed to supporting both the continued viability of the Maine lobster fishery and the improvement of the health of the western North Atlantic stock of the North Atlantic right whale (“NARW”) through management measures that accurately address documented risks to the NARW based on the best available science. Maine lobstermen are world leaders in conservation and stewardship. We take pride in our longstanding sustainable fishing practices, which include the implementation of successful measures for over two decades to protect the NARW. Since NMFS formed the Atlantic Large Whale Take Reduction Team in 1997, the MLA has been fully engaged in working to reduce the potential risks to the NARW from entanglement in U.S. fishing gear, and there was a corresponding increase in NARW abundance until NARW distribution shifted to areas lacking adequate protections.

1. NMFS must apply the law equally among sectors and take immediate action to reduce NARW vessel strikes.

NMFS is not applying the Marine Mammal Protection Act (“MMPA”) and the Endangered Species Act (“ESA”) with equal rigor to different sectors of the regulated community. Specifically, NMFS is holding the Maine lobster fishery to a more stringent standard than other sectors despite the lobster fishery’s demonstrated success in reducing NARW impacts. Since implementation of enhanced take reduction planning regulations in 2009, the Maine lobster fishery has been in near full compliance and had zero observed mortality or serious injury NARW interactions. And yet, NMFS has failed to account for and publicly acknowledge the regulatory success demonstrated by the observed data. Instead, NMFS has directed its efforts towards imposing more regulatory requirements on the Maine lobster fishery, including a proposal to unnecessarily reduce risk by an additional 98% in ten years, which the MLA believes would effectively eliminate the Maine lobster fishery as we know it today.

In contrast, despite evidence demonstrating that compliance with the existing vessel speed regulations has been poor and that the number of vessel strikes has not been meaningfully reduced, NMFS credits the vessel traffic sector with a slight decrease in mortality and serious injury and makes no concrete recommendations in the Assessment for immediate action to address vessel strikes. See Assessment at 23-24. Insofar as MLA is aware, there are presently no exceptions from the take prohibitions of either the MMPA or the ESA applicable to vessel strikes. See 16 U.S.C. § 1372(a)(1) (MMPA take prohibition); 16 U.S.C. § 1538(a)(1) (ESA take prohibition). Yet vessel strikes in U.S. waters are a known source of NARW take that continues to occur without any apparent meaningful enforcement (based on the Assessment’s enforcement summary, see Section 2 infra). Moreover, the tools to reduce vessel strikes—i.e., decreasing vessel speed and reducing spatial overlap—are available now, and NMFS knows what types of vessels present the most risk, where and when the highest levels of risk are present, and where compliance with existing rules is lacking. See Assessment at 3.

Given these facts, the tenuous status of the NARW, and NMFS’s legal obligation to enforce the take prohibitions of the MMPA and the ESA, NMFS must not wait to proceed with a rulemaking to improve the existing vessel speed regulations. There is an urgent need for NMFS to take immediate action to both strengthen existing rules and meaningfully enforce them.

As set forth in the Assessment, the following areas present the most risk to NARW and are ripe for immediate strengthening of regulations and enforcement efforts:

- Large vessels, such as container ships, have documented low levels of compliance. Id. at 11, Figure 16. To compound this problem, the proportionate size of ocean going vessels (“OGVs”) is increasing rapidly. Id. at 10.
- Compliance rates are poor in the Chesapeake and North Carolina to Georgia seasonal management areas (“SMAs”). Id. at 11.
- Across all SMAs, pleasure vessels and passenger vessels (including cruise ships) have poor compliance and exhibit “particularly high percentages of high speed.” Id. at 12.
- General cargo and bulk carrier vessels have low compliance in the Great South Channel SMA. Id. at 12.
- Certain port entrance areas—i.e., Wilmington, Charleston, Savannah, Brunswick, and Jacksonville—have very low levels of compliance. Id. at 13, 35. This is particularly “concerning in Charleston and Savannah given the higher levels of transit distance and longer entrance channels into these busy ports.” Id. at 13-14.
- The use of dynamic management areas (“DMAs”) has not been effective and, yet, some of those areas have high levels of vessel strike risk. Id. at 16-17.
- The best available data indicate that certain small vessels (< 65 ft) pose a heightened level of risk, namely pleasure and pilot vessels and small vessels in the Mid-Atlantic. Id. at 18.
- NARW mothers tending calves, calves, and juveniles are subject to higher vessel strike risk because they typically occupy areas at the surface or subsurface. Id. at 22-23.

The Assessment’s recommendations do not specifically or directly describe how these known areas of risk will be addressed. NMFS has clearly identified deficiencies in the vessel strike rules that place NARWs at risk of serious injury and mortality. NMFS is obligated to implement and enforce new rules so that these known risks are immediately addressed. In that light, we offer the following recommendations.

2. Enforcement must be improved.

The enforcement of the current vessel strike rules has been extremely weak. Indeed, the Assessment devotes less than a page to enforcement. The Assessment states that the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration General Counsel (“NOAA GC”), NOAA Office of Law Enforcement (“NOAA OLE”), and the U.S. Coast Guard (“USCG”) collectively made only 178 “enforcement related contacts” during a three-year period (2017-2019). Assessment at 31. The Assessment provides no indication of what type of contacts were made or, for example, how many notices of violation and assessment (“NOVAs”) were issued. In sharp contrast, in a single year (2017), NOAA OLE made 1489 contacts with fishing vessels subject to the Atlantic Large Whale Take Reduction Plan, which includes 1317 contacts with lobster fishing vessels, finding a

93% compliance rate.³ The USCG also undertakes a targeted enforcement program for those fishing vessels.⁴

NOAA GC, NOAA OLE, and the USCG can and clearly must improve enforcement of the vessel speed rules. As identified in the Assessment, they can identify areas and vessels with high and chronic non-compliance with readily available AIS data. They can issue NOVAs and pursue enforcement actions, which, based on the scant information provided in the Assessment, has apparently not occurred to date. As described in Section 1 above, there are known areas and types of vessels with high rates of non-compliance. NOAA GC, NOAA OLE, and the USGC should direct more resources to substantially increase and target enforcement efforts at those areas and vessel types.

In addition, the Assessment recognizes that “some vessels may be claiming severe maneuverability constraints without reasonable grounds,” but suggests that enforcement efforts are constrained because “[t]here is no efficient mechanism by which the agency can collect such data from the logbook entries required for use of the safety deviation.” Assessment at 37. This is not a barrier to enforcement. If NOAA OLE has evidence (e.g., AIS data) that a vessel has violated the regulations, it arguably may proceed to issue a NOVA and pursue an investigation or enforcement action. The vessel has the burden to demonstrate the applicability of the safety exception and, if needed, NMFS should modify the existing regulations to clarify that burden. Lack of data regarding use (or abuse) of the safety exception should not impede enforcement efforts.

3. NMFS should require mandatory compliance with all DMAs.

The Assessment demonstrates that the regulatory flexibility provided to covered vessels through voluntary compliance with dynamic management areas (“DMAs”) has produced unsatisfactory outcomes. Only four out of 79 DMAs reviewed in the Assessment had the intended effect of reducing the speed of OGVs to below 10 kts, with a mean speed more than 12.5 kts. Assessment at 16. The cause for such poor compliance is unclear; however, the voluntary nature of DMAs ensures that there are no consequences for noncompliance.

When NMFS originally promulgated the current vessel speed rules in 2008, it stated that it would “monitor voluntary compliance with designated DMAs [and,] [i]f adherence is not satisfactory, NMFS will consider making them mandatory, through a subsequent rulemaking.” 73 Fed. Reg. 60,173, 60,180 (Oct. 10, 2008). The Assessment makes clear that voluntary compliance with DMAs is not satisfactory. Moreover, although Canada’s measures to reduce NARW mortality are generally less protective than U.S. measures (see Section 6 infra), Canada does utilize mandatory DMAs. It complicates the U.S.’s position in (correctly) demanding that Canada take additional steps to reduce NARW mortality when this single aspect of Canada’s regulatory program is more protective than the U.S. Should NMFS continue to use DMAs as a management tool, compliance should be mandatory.

4. NMFS should convert existing DMAs that present high levels of risk to SMAs.

As documented in the Assessment, DMAs are not effective in reducing vessel strike risk and have very low rates of compliance. Assessment at 16-17. MLA recommends that NMFS identify DMAs that have significant and consistent sightings of NARW and convert those DMAs to SMAs.⁵ Additionally, NMFS should promulgate a regulatory framework as part of modified vessel speed rules that establishes criteria for converting DMAs to SMAs when consistent aggregations of NARWs are identified in certain DMAs. This would allow high-risk DMA areas to be converted to SMAs without additional time-consuming rulemaking processes.

5. NMFS should implement new measures to reduce spatial overlap of vessels and NARWs in areas of high risk.

As described in the Assessment, NMFS has three primary tools for reducing vessel strike risk: “1) reducing the spatial overlap of right whales and vessels, 2) reducing the speed of vessels transiting through right whale habitat, and 3) promoting mariner awareness of right whale presence.” Assessment at 3-4. However, the Assessment contains no recommendations or substantive analyses addressing the potential merit in reducing the spatial overlap of right whales and vessels. And the information presented in the Assessment suggests that measures to reduce spatial overlap could be effective in reducing risk. For example, such measures were already successfully implemented in the modification to the Boston Traffic Separation Scheme. Id. at 6. The Assessment also identifies specific areas where compliance is very low (e.g., entrance areas in southern ports). NMFS should examine and, if appropriate, implement measures to reduce spatial overlap of whales and vessels in those particular areas. Such measures could also be implemented temporally, such as during the calving season or other times of significant NARW presence, to reduce potential navigational impacts.

6. The U.S. should engage in targeted diplomacy to strengthen Canada’s regulatory regime.

Since 2010, there has been a well-established shift in NARW habitat preference that has “increased the risk from anthropogenic threats as the whales moved into habitats with fewer protections in Canadian waters (Meyer-Gutbrod et al. 2018).” Assessment at 1; see also id. at 28 (“there appears to have been a considerable change in right whale habitat use patterns in areas where most of the population has been observed in previous years (Hayes et al. 2019)”). Although Canada’s regulatory regime has certain restrictive elements (e.g., mandatory DMAs), ⁵ See id. at 17 (“OGVs, which made up 35% of the total distance transited through DMAs, are a particular concern given their higher overall average speeds. Vessels continue to transit thousands of nautical miles at speeds above 10 knots through active DMAs, where right whales are known to have aggregated.”).

Canada's regulations inexplicably designate the main shipping channel as a voluntary DMA despite designating the surrounding waters as SMAs.⁶ Accordingly, and particularly in light of the substantial shifts of NARW migratory patterns into Canadian waters, Canada must improve and strengthen its vessel speed and separation regulations. The MLA recommends that the U.S. engage directly with Canada to ensure that Canada modifies its regulatory regime to fully address vessel strike risk to the NARW population.

7. NMFS should apply the vessel speed rules to specific categories of small vessels.

The information presented in the Assessment supports a targeted application of the vessel speed rules to certain categories of small (< 65 ft) vessels. Specifically, "more than 50% of pleasure vessel transit distance exceeded 10 knots and that number rose to more than 85% for pilot vessels." Assessment at 18. "Given the ubiquity of small pleasure and pilot vessel traffic in some SMAs and the high speeds at which many travel, these vessel types may pose a particular threat to right whales." Id. In addition, the "North Carolina to Georgia SMA has the most transit distance and the most category II and III vessel size traffic." *Id.*⁷ Moreover, although small vessels are better able to maneuver away from visible NARWs, they are less able to do so in areas where whales are foraging or nursing just below the surface, such as in Cape Cod Bay, the southeast, or along the mid-Atlantic migratory corridor.⁸ NMFS should therefore apply the vessel speed rules to small vessels with established non-compliance (pleasure and pilot vessels) in areas of demonstrated strike risk from small vessels.

In contrast, there is no basis to extend the vessel speed rules to fishing and sailing vessels under 65 ft. As NMFS recognizes in the Assessment, "sailing and fishing vessels traveled at lower speeds with nearly 100% of sailing vessel traffic traveling at speeds of under 10 knots." Assessment at 18. Moreover, NMFS recently concluded:

Given the rarity of vessel strikes when considering (1) the large amount of vessel traffic in the action area, (2) that all fishing vessels represent only a portion of marine vessel activity, (3) that fishing vessels considered in this Opinion represent an even

⁸ See Assessment at 3 ("Right whales are particularly vulnerable to vessel strike due to their penchant for coastal habitats and frequent occurrence at near surface depths. In some habitats, such as Cape Cod Bay, right whales often forage just below the water's surface, rendering them hidden to mariners but vulnerable to vessel collisions"); id. ("Mothers with newborn calves frequently rest and nurse in nearshore habitats at or near the water surface placing them at high risk of vessel interactions on southeast calving grounds, along the mid-Atlantic migratory corridor and in New England (Cusano et al. 2018)."); id. at 32 ("Mothers are also at heightened risk for vessel strikes in the southeast calving ground while tending to very young calves; they spend the majority of their time at or near the surface and were found to dive shallower and for shorter periods of times than other right whales in the same area (Cusano et al. 2018).")

smaller portion of marine activity; and (4) regulations in place to reduce the risk of vessel strike to whales, it seems extremely unlikely and discountable that a fishing vessel would strike a whale, even during transiting. Based on this information, we have determined that all listed marine mammals in the action area are not likely to be adversely affected by fishing vessels operating under the proposed action.^[9]

Accordingly, if NMFS extends the vessel speed rules to vessels under 65 ft, sailing vessels and fishing vessels should be excluded. To the extent NMFS believes fishing vessels pose a vessel strike risk that must be regulated, then NMFS must first (a) include the fishing industry in its outreach efforts,¹⁰ (b) utilize voluntary programs before imposing costly regulations on fishing vessels, and (c) conduct a full and thorough assessment of the economic and safety effects of the potential imposition of vessel speed or separation regulations on fishing vessels.

In conclusion, the MLA appreciates NMFS's consideration of the comments and recommendations provided in this letter. Again, MLA strongly encourages NMFS to take immediate action to strengthen the vessel speed rules, and to enforce those rules, to address well-established risks posed by certain types of vessels in specific areas. My name is Brennan Strong and I have already shared a lot of my thoughts with you and others regarding the new BiOp and regulations for right whales. I wanted to share a few more genuine suggestions while you are still accepting comments. Instead of more U.S. fishing industry regulation, we all need a lot more research. The only new U.S. trap/pot regulation I support is increased gear marking with state and area specific colors and that all gear buoys everywhere have at least the same marking requirements as Maine (license number unique to that fisherman/gear owner). Beyond this, anymore regulation is not backed by enough credible research to justify immediate implementation. I can say this with absolute certainty for Maine, I can not speak specifically for other states. I heard the testimony of a man at a recent public hearing, who was at an ALWTRT meeting and saw a pile of fishing gear pulled off a whale and immediately could tell none of it was from Maine.

Please re - direct all effort to increased research and whale disentanglement efforts. We need whale disentanglement teams that are as fearless and tenacious as they are intelligent, willing to do whatever it takes whenever needed to disentangle whales safely. I applaud those who have led the way with these brave rescues. You have my contact so I would happy to be trained on how to help, as well as many others I know.

We should be conducting a world-class study on what specific gear configurations and locations are causing entanglements, and during what times of the year. We need both public and private, state and federal, U.S. and Canadian scientists, engineers, ocean goers, and fishermen for an all hands on deck effort to get to the bottom of this serious issue. As well as the gear studies, we need to do much better with tracking right whales. I appreciate and congratulate the work that has been done so far, but it is time to build on our successes, and turn away from the scary path we appear to be going down. If you do not make serious and timely changes to your plans, I will go out of business in 10 years or less. The job I've loved and pursued for over half of my 22 years on earth will be illegal to do practically, safely, or efficiently. I will have to sell my boat and gear which will be rendered worthless, and try to fit in somewhere in the world that I don't belong.

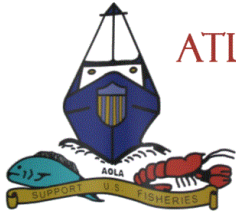

As far as vessel strikes go, the U.S. and Canada need immediate world-class research and regulations to reach 0 vessel strike injuries/deaths. Again utilizing both public and private, state and federal, U.S. and Canadian scientists, engineers, ocean goers, and fishermen. This research needs to include a specific study on how the complete shutdown of cruise ships and reduction in freight ships in 2020 positively effected the right whale population. Remembering that during this time the U.S trap/pot fishery still deployed almost 100% of our gear. Personally, I actually doubled gear and production from 2019 to 2020. Most vessel speed and route information can be easily tracked with AIS, so 100% enforcement and compliance is very realistic. Frankly the fact that we don't yet have 100% enforcement and compliance for the current vessel speed/route rule is a failure. I see 10 knots is the number, but that is twice the speed of a right whale. Our dynamic management areas need to be accurate, enforced, and continually updated and moved if necessary to provide the best whale protections possible. Ship noise interferes with right whale communication.

I truly care deeply about the whales , all sea life, our way of life, and coastal communities, I hope and pray everyone else involved in this process does too. If there is any way I can be of help in making things work for everyone, please don't hesitate to contact me.

To Whom it May Concern,

The Atlantic Offshore Lobstermen's Association (AOLA) submits the following comments on the draft Biological Opinion (BiOp) for ten fishery management plans in the Greater Atlantic Region. Our comments focus on the North Atlantic Right Whale (NARW) sections of the draft BiOp and, in many cases, are also relevant to the Atlantic Large Whale Take Reduction Plan's outstanding proposed rule. These comments are in addition to the joint comments we've submitted with other fisheries associations.

We applaud the Agency for selecting 2010-2019 as the reference years on which to estimate the batched FMP's future risk to NARW. As noted in the BiOp this date range coincides with a regime change in the NARW's zooplankton prey and includes the latest available data. That said, we are concerned with the arbitrary method employed by NMFS to attribute mortality and serious injury (M/SI) events during this period to specific country, cause, and fishery. Section 7.2.1 of the draft document employs a mind spinning series of assumptions and calculations to apportion unassigned M/SI and calculate the US federal fisheries' risk reduction targets.

From 2010 through 2019 there were 49 M/SI from confirmed entanglements, 9 Canadian, 2 US, and 38 unattributed to a country (Table 56). NMFS opts to apportion the 38 unattributed cases equally (50/50%) between the countries, rather than utilize a proportional division based on known cases (81% CN/19% US). This results in an annual average US entanglement derived M/SI of 1.9 cases, compared to 0.89 (less than the potential biological removal limit) if calculated proportionally. While the Agency provides a rationale to defend the 50/50 split, we note that both the Atlantic Large Whale Take Reduction Team and CIE Peer Review Panel expressed concern with this method.

During this same ten year period there were additionally 12 M/SI cases where both the country and cause (i.e. entanglement vs ship strike) were unknown. For these cases, the BiOp employs a 50/50 split to assign country, followed by a proportional split to assign cause between US ship strike (26%) and US entanglement (74%). The BiOp further uses this same mixed method to assign "cryptic mortality" (Table 57). We strongly recommend that NMFS employ a proportional method that reflects known data trends in all cases to assign both country and cause. This would result in an annual average of 1.15 non-cryptic entanglement M/SI in US waters and 1.56 cryptic entanglements (see joint letter for concerns about cryptic mortality methodology).

We also have concerns with the method used to attribute risk by gear type. The BiOp notes that of the 38 entanglements unattributed to a country, only a small number were attributed to a gear type - 2.5 were assigned to gillnet or net gear, 1 to trap/pot gear - yet the BiOp seemingly ignores this data and assigns all unknown gear type entanglements to trap/pot gear on the basis that 99.7% of the vertical lines in US waters are attributed to trap/pot fisheries (Table 57, IEC data). This is nothing more than an unsupported leap of faith by NMFS and is not validated by the facts. Not only does this method, once again, not consider the known data, it also ignores that fact that most US trap/pot gear is fished in state waters, whereas the BiOp presents a plan for reducing risk in federal fisheries. It also ignores the fact that US fishermen have been implementing risk reduction measures for NARWs for 20 years and that Canada only starting to do so in 2018. Since 2010, US lobster gear, specifically, has comprised only 0.04% of known entanglement cases.¹ The AOLA recommends that NMFS reconsider the assumptions made when apportioning all unknown entanglements to trap/pots.

In response to the risk assignment calculations presented in the draft BiOp, NMFS has proposed a ten-year conservation framework that outlines actions that would result in a 98% risk reduction in federal trap/pot fisheries. However, the BiOp notes that “even with a very high level of risk reduction in the United States, the population trajectory will not increase if NARW mortalities continue to occur at current levels in Canadian waters” (page 340). Clearly, action taken outside of US waters will have tremendous, and possibly devastating, impacts on the future of US fixed gear fisheries. Unless Canada continues to improve their fisheries and ship strike regulations to reduce M/SI, NMFS will be forced to enact increasingly severe regulations to avoid a jeopardy findings and maintain incidental take permits in US fisheries.

We support NMFS’s development of an “adaptive” conservation framework which should, conceivably, allow for consideration and incorporation of future conservation efforts undertaken across the species range from all sources of harm. However, other than two vaguely described evaluation periods, the framework actions as currently proscribed place the burden of risk reduction primarily on the shoulders of US federal fixed gear fishermen. Additionally, the lack of specificity in the framework description leaves open the real possibility of lawsuits and court mandated actions. We feel the Agency and US fishermen would be better served by having a specific list of measurable and achievable actions that focus on improving the science, removing uncertainty, improving transparency, and fostering collaboration with Canadian counterparts.

We acknowledge that NMFS staff and leadership have worked diligently on the issue of NARW conservation, but the urgency of this situation requires a more detailed action plan than outlined in the BiOp framework. With that in mind, we make the following recommendations regarding the framework process. This list includes many items already in development by the Agency or recommended by NMFS staff. In addition to our recommendations below, we feel it would be useful to have the Atlantic Large Whale Take Reduction Team review the proposed conservation framework actions and develop a list of suggested changes for consideration before publication of the final Biological Opinion.

Short term priorities (less than one year)

- Given the well documented environmental regime shift in 2010, it is critical that NARWs and their prey species be effectively monitored. NMFS should fully reinstate funding for annual copepod surveys and predictive zooplankton modeling as they relate to NARWs future use of US habitats. NMFS should implement a plan for systematic broad-scale coastwide aerial, vessel, and acoustic surveying of the NARW population to standardize US data sources. Details about how to improve monitoring have been outlined in an outstanding 2020 NMFS Monitoring and Surveillance Technical Memo.²
- Given the shifts of Calanus sp. biomass and NARWs into Canadian waters, NMFS should immediately re-engage Canadian counterparts in a dialog aimed at standardizing copepod and NARW sampling and surveying methods. There needs to be transboundary compatible surveys and data streams to properly monitor the stock.
- There should also be immediate standardization of NARW conservation programs in each country. The recently announced implementation delay of Import Provisions, which were already 5 years in the making, needs to be reversed. Given that the Import Rule³ is one of the few tools the US has to increase marine mammal protections and ensure comparable protections and fair competition, NMFS should seek expedited discussions with Canadian counterparts and conduct quarterly bilateral meetings.
- We suggest bilateral meetings include the leadership of NOAA/NMFS, one New England Fishery Management Council representative, one Atlantic States Marine Fisheries Commission representative, one environmental/conservation organization representative, and one inshore and one offshore commercial lobsterman. This would add a needed layer of transparency to the discussions, strengthen the US delegation, and allow the two fishery management organization that manage most fixed fishing gear in NARW habitat direct access and input to the discussions. There are many examples of Council and Commission participation in international discussions, therefore this request is not without precedent.
- NMFS should expedite rulemaking on long overdue tasks including 100% reporting in the federal lobster/Jonah crab fishery and implementation of a trap cap reduction in LMA 3. The latter was recommended by Atlantic States Marine Fisheries Commission in 2012.
- NMFS should immediately start rulemaking to address the increase in ship strikes in US waters described in the recently published vessel speed rule assessment⁴ and further documented in recent weeks in the South Atlantic. In the interim, there should be increased enforcement of existing ship speed regulations and consideration of amending fee structures to be commiserate with violations.

³ Marine Mammal Protection Act's Fish and Fish Product Import Provisions

Longer term priorities

- US and Canadian scientists should collaborate on an annual report (similar to the NARW Consortium’s annual “report card”) that summarizes changes in stock status, provides the latest entanglement and ship strike data, and provides links to, or appendices of, other relevant reports and documents. Currently there is a tremendous amount of work being done by both countries’ governments and private organizations that should be made available in a timely and transparent way to advance our collective understand of the species and human interactions.
- US and Canadian scientists should collaborate on a transboundary benchmark NARW stock assessment to be completed in 2022/2023. This assessment should be externally peer reviewed and made publicly available well in advance of the 2024 evaluation period. Phase 3 rulemaking should not begin until the results of the peer reviewed stock assessment are available to assess progress toward conservation goals.
- We strongly encourage the Agency to improve the NARW population model used to assess jeopardy. This will require both better data and re-evaluation of the model’s assumptions.

In conclusion, the Atlantic Offshore Lobstermen’s Association is concerned that the draft BiOp ultimately places an overwhelming burden on US federal fisheries. We further worry that the Agency is not acting expeditiously to address underlying uncertainty in critical data sets and models, and that the conservation framework outlined in the BiOp could fail to meet its goals. Unless comprehensive and concerted efforts are undertaken to reduce serious injury and mortality risk across the species range from all sources the government and fishermen will be subject to future litigation, intervention by the courts, and, ultimately, a NARW jeopardy finding for US fixed gear fisheries.

Re: Right Whale Vessel Speed Rule Assessment, June 2020

Dr. Good,

We are writing to urge you to implement increased mandatory speed restrictions in the habitat of the iconic, critically-endangered North Atlantic right whale. With fewer than 366 in existence, the right whale is the most endangered large whale in the world and encounters many threats along the East Coast, especially in their calving grounds off Florida.¹

Vessel strikes are the most immediate threat to newborn right whale calves, and recent news of a month-old calf washing up on a South Florida beach demonstrates the need for more protections to stop these preventable and tragic deaths.² Since 2017, we have lost 32 North Atlantic right whales due to human interaction. We cannot afford to lose more of this species, as it is hurdling towards extinction.

The United States must act immediately to prevent future vessel strikes. Mandatory 10 knot speed restrictions in NOAA's Dynamic Management Areas (DMAs), currently only voluntary, are necessary to ensure the safety of right whale mother and calf pairs.

While the Ship Strike Reduction Act of 2008 has dramatically lowered right whale deaths from large ship collisions, this legislation does not go far enough. NOAA's own assessment of this rule shows that voluntary slowdowns are ineffective. A June 2020 study conducted by NOAA fisheries concluded that, while an overall decline of ship strikes was brought about by the voluntary restrictions, the results "indicate that additional action is warranted to further reduce the threat of vessel collisions" to right whales.³

Just this month, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans in Canada pledged to impose greater protections for North Atlantic right whales in Canadian waters. The Canadian government announced in 2018 that it will employ mandatory temporary speed reduction zones, which increase surveillance to detect right whales in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. In these zones, if a right whale is spotted, that area will also be closed off to fixed-gear fishing for 15 days. In addition, the government will continue to enforce seasonal mandatory speed restrictions.⁴ Violators of the 10 knot restriction may be assessed a fine of up to C$25,000.⁵ As a result of this much needed mandatory speed restriction, zero right whale deaths were reported in Canadian waters in 2020. This evident success prompted Transport Canada and Fisheries and Oceans Canada to renew these policies into 2021.⁶

It is urgent that NOAA follows in Canada's footsteps in regard to enforced DMAs rather than the voluntary policy that is currently in place. Since "The National Marine Fisheries Service continues to believe that dynamic management is a useful tool in reducing ship strikes", it would create immediate relief to right whales if DMA speed reductions were made mandatory.⁷ An assessment conducted by NOAA focused on the voluntary DMA program found limited mariner cooperation that fell well short of levels reached in mandatory slowdowns.⁸ A similar mandatory speed restriction policy must be implemented along our East Coast in order to prevent the extinction of right whales, and it needs to be implemented without delay. More than anything, the right whale needs allies. We urge you today to impose mandatory speed restrictions now to save this severely endangered species.

Thank you for your time and consideration in this pressing matter.

Sincerely,

Michael Jarbeau

Dear Dr. Good:

Ref: North Atlantic Right Whale (Eubalaena glacialis) Vessel Speed Rule Assessment

On behalf of the Animal Welfare Institute (AWI), I submit the following comments regarding NOAA Fisheries North Atlantic Right Whale (Eubalaena glacialis) Vessel Speed Rule Assessment.

Background

As is widely known, vessel strikes are a leading cause of significant injury and mortality of North Atlantic right whales.¹ The annual documented rate of anthropogenic mortality and serious injury —due to both ship strikes and entanglement — has exceeded the population’s potential biological removal level (PBR) since 1995. The North Atlantic right whale is now considered one of the most critically endangered populations of large whales in the world, with the

International Union for Conservation of Nature (IUCN) characterizing the species as being “one step from extinction.”²

Scientists from the New England Aquarium recently released a new population estimate for North Atlantic right whales, indicating that the population numbered only 356 by the close of 2019.³ Even more concerning, these researchers believe that only some 70 breeding females remain in the population and that low birth rates coupled with the number of whale deaths “means that there could be no females left in the next 10 to 20 years.”⁴ A recent study has also shown that known deaths of the critically endangered species accounted for only 36% of all estimated death from 1990 to 2017. As the authors highlight, “observed carcass counts were poor predictors of estimated annual numbers of whales dying.”⁵

It is clear that the North Atlantic right whale population cannot sustain the death or serious injury of even a single whale per year if the survival and ultimate recovery of the species is to be ensured; in expressing its serious concern over the right whale’s status, the International Whaling Commission’s Scientific Committee has called on the U.S. and Canada to make every effort to reduce human-induced threats, including vessel strikes, to zero.⁶

In addition to the population-level risks posed by ship strikes, AWI emphasizes that this is a serious animal welfare issue. Baleen whales are sentient and social animals, and the fact that individual whales of all ages are being exposed to potential vessel strikes warrants significant concern. Such strikes can lead to blunt force trauma and lacerations that can cause chronic infections, damage to blubber, muscle and bone, amputations and even death.⁷ Injured whales experience reduced welfare due to pain, stress, and even possible associated negative psychological states.⁸ With regard to right whales, it is of great concern that young whales, including calves, and females have been disproportionately impacted by vessel strikes.⁹ We contend that NOAA's proposed vessel speed rules must be strengthened if North Atlantic right whales are to be spared from further suffering and mortality associated with vessel strikes, and extinction is averted.

Legal obligations

Both the Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA) and the Endangered Species Act (ESA) generally prohibit the unauthorized "take" of North Atlantic right whales. When Congress enacted the MMPA in 1972 it did so in recognition that "certain species and population stocks of marine mammals are, or may be, in danger of extinction or depletion as a result of man's activities," and that "such species and population stocks should not be permitted to diminish beyond the point at which they cease to be a significant functioning element in the ecosystem of which they are a part," and to this end, "they should not be permitted to diminish below their optimum sustainable population." (16 U.S.C. § 1361). To address these and other concerns, the MMPA established a broad moratorium on the taking of marine mammals, subject to certain limited exceptions under which NMFS can authorize takes incidental to an activity as long as certain standards are met (Id. § 1371).

The ESA protects imperiled species by listing them as “endangered” or “threatened.” A species is endangered if it “is in danger of extinction throughout all or a significant portion of its range.” Id. § 1532(6), which is clearly the case with the North Atlantic right whale. Further, it is evident that the “plain intent” Congress had with regard to the ESA was to “halt and reverse the trend toward species extinction, whatever the cost.”¹⁰ As required by Section 7(a)(2) of the ESA (16 U.S.C. §1531 et seq.), NMFS must ensure that any actions authorized are not likely to jeopardize the continued existence of a species; the agency is mandated under Section 7 to evaluate vessel strike risk to right whales and recommend measures to minimize such risk.

As currently drafted, AWI contends that the vessel strike management measures proposed by NMFS are insufficient to address the adverse impacts on North Atlantic and will jeopardize the continued survival of the species

Speed restrictions must be extended to smaller vessels

We concur with NMFS that “the proportion of small vessels involved in collisions with whales is concerning because the vessel speed rule does not apply to this vessel size class (< 65 ft in length).”¹¹ According to a recent model from Kelly et al. (2021), which analyzed lethal injury as a function of several vessel and whale properties, it has been shown that (1) vessels of all sizes can yield stresses likely to cause lethal injuries and (2) large vessels produce stresses likely to cause lethal injuries even when traveling at reduced speeds (i.e., 10 knots). The Kelly study also found that vessels less than 45 metric tons have a 70 percent chance of causing mortality if striking a whale.¹² NMFS itself has acknowledged “that vessels less than 65 ft (19.8 m) may pose

The US Supreme Court, although recognizing the burden in investing tens of millions of dollars of public funds to protect the habitat of the snail darter fish, interpreted both the plain language of Section 7 of the ESA and the legislative history as “giving highest priority to the preservation of endangered species”.

a threat to right whales”.¹³ We note that in both 2019 and 2020, the Massachusetts Division of Marine Fisheries extended its state seasonal speed limit restrictions to include vessels less than 65 feet.¹⁴ In addition, Canada has implemented a mandatory 10 knot speed limit throughout much of the Gulf of St. Lawrence for all vessels greater than 13 meters (~42.5 feet) in length.¹⁵

Proposed management areas are insufficient

Given that the timing and distribution of North Atlantic right whales has been changing over the last decade,¹⁶ there is an urgent need to take into account the temporal and spatial shifts that have become increasingly apparent for the species, and their impact on existing vessel management areas. As recognized by both the International Whaling Commission (IWC) and the International Maritime Organization (IMO) rerouting vessel traffic around areas with known concentrations of whales and implementing speed restrictions in certain areas is an effective mitigation measure.¹⁷

Currently, NOAA relies on two different types of vessel speed restriction areas in order to mitigate the dangers ship strikes pose to North Atlantic right whales: mandatory Seasonal Management Area (SMA) speed zones in places where whales are expected to be, and voluntary Dynamic Management Area (DMA) speed zones implemented once whales have been detected.

Given that right whale foraging activity in the area south of Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard has been steadily increasing in recent recent years and that the whales are now present in that area year round,¹⁸ AWI agrees with NMFS that this zone – currently a DMA — warrants designation as an SMA. We urge the agency to expand the Block Island Seasonal Management Area to the east, and make the entire area including the area south of the islands a Seasonal Management Area effective year-round. This would be consistent with the map of core right whale habitats that appeared in NOAA Technical Memo Memorandum NMFS-OPR-64, which indicates a year-round presence of whales in the South of the Islands area.

We also ask that the Seasonal Management Area outside the ports of New York and New Jersey be expanded to 40 nautical miles, effective year-round, with dynamic vessel speed restrictions in areas of designated Traffic Separation Schemes. This would be consistent with the recent “slow down” zone that was implemented for the New York Bight, as well as detections of right whales in the area.¹⁹

AWI further urges NMFS to combine the Off Race Point and Cape Cod Bay Seasonal Management Areas into a single management area effective January 1 through May 15.

We are concerned that as currently implemented, the trigger for DMAs to take effect is limited to the detection of three whales or more; at a minimum, this should be expanded to include any sighting of a cow/calf pair. As the Massachusetts Division of Marine Fisheries (2020) has noted, “[t]he presence of these mother/calf pairs elevates the need for conservative management.”²⁰ We note, however, that Transport Canada’s 2021 speed restrictions within both DMAs and SMAs take effect upon the detection of a single whale²¹ and we call on NMFS to take this same, more precautionary approach.

Voluntary speed limits fail to provide sufficient protection

As noted in its own vessel speed assessment, NMFS recognized that “in some portions of SMAs mariner compliance is low, with rates below 25% for the largest commercial vessels outside four ports in the southeast.”²² This is consistent with findings by others (McKenna et al. 2012, Silber et al. 2012 and Laist et al. 2014) noting that experience has shown a lack of compliance with voluntary requests to use reduced speeds.²³ However, when mandatory speed reductions were implemented and enforced along the US eastern coast, compliance was shown to be much higher.²⁴

A 2020 report by Oceana, which analyzed Automatic Identification System (AIS) data provided by Global Fishing Watch found that between January 22 and March 6, 2020, more than 41 percent of 446 ships in the Nantucket Dynamic Management Area exceeded the voluntary speed limit of 10 knots. In contrast, 88.4 percent of ships transiting the Block Island SMA were in compliance with the mandatory speed restriction.²⁵

A similar study by Oceana Canada also found that voluntary speed restrictions failed to work; the organization monitored vessel speeds during the two trial slowdown periods put in place by Transport Canada, from April 28 to June 15 and October 1 to November 15 and found that two-thirds of vessels failed to follow the recommended voluntary vessel speed limit.²⁶

Closing remarks

It is important to note that despite its small population size, the North Atlantic right whale is not doomed to extinction if NOAA can act swiftly and decisively. There are numerous examples of mammals—including marine mammals—that have recovered from low levels.²⁷ AWI concurs with a recent paper by Wiedenfeld et al. which stated that extinction of a species is neither inevitable nor acceptable, and that resources dedicated to conserving threatened species are insufficient. The authors rightly state that a goal of no human-induced extinctions is an imperative given the irreversibility of species loss.²⁸

The North Atlantic right whale population is at a critical juncture, with mortalities in recent years far exceeding births. NOAA must act urgently to address known causes of right whale

Re: Comments on the North Atlantic Right Whale Vessel Speed Rule Assessment

Dear Ms. Good,

The Southern Environmental Law Center (“SELC”) submits these comments on behalf of Virginia Conservation Network, N.C. Conservation Network, N.C. Wildlife Federation, Savannah Riverkeeper, S.C. Coastal Conservation League, S.C. Sierra Club, S.C. Wildlife Federation, Altamaha Coastkeeper, Brunswick Environmental Action Team, Center for a Sustainable Coast, Georgia Interfaith Power and Light, Georgia Wildlife Federation, Glynn Environmental Coalition, Initiative to Protect Jekyll Island, Ogeechee Riverkeeper, One Hundred Miles, St. Marys EarthKeepers, Florida Wildlife Federation, and Matanzas Riverkeeper, in response to the National Marine Fisheries Service’s (“NMFS”) June 2020 report titled North Atlantic Right Whale (Eubalaena glacialis) Vessel Speed Rule Assessment (“the Report”).¹

As organizations working to protect the wildlife and natural resources of the Southeast, we strongly agree with the Report’s recommendation that current vessel speed restrictions must be strengthened to protect right whales. The waters off the Carolinas, Georgia, and Florida are especially important for the conservation of the species as they are the species’ only known calving grounds, hosting valuable and vulnerable right whale mothers and calves from November through April each year. The waters off Virginia are also essential, as both a critical part of the species’ migratory route, as well as an increasingly recognized foraging ground, hosting at least a subset of right whales year-round.

Scientists are unanimous that current mortality rates for the species are unsustainable, and without immediate action to address both vessel strikes and fishing gear entanglements, we are likely to see the extinction of the species in our lifetime. The population, which stands at an estimated mere 356 individuals, cannot sustain the loss of even one individual. Yet vessel strikes have been confirmed to kill or seriously injure, on average, three right whales per year since

2017. And recent research shows those numbers could be more than three times higher, as more than two-thirds of right whale deaths now go undetected. Just last month, a one-month old calf and its mother were both struck off the coast of Florida; the calf was killed and the mother is presumed dead.²

NMFS originally promulgated the Vessel Speed Rule in 2008³ to reduce the occurrence and severity of vessel collisions with North Atlantic right whales and promised to conduct periodic reviews of these regulations, considering modifications if protections were found to be inadequate. The Report plainly shows that while current vessel speed restrictions have been successful at reducing the severity of vessel strikes, further action is urgently needed to reduce vessel strike risk to right whales. In particular:

- NMFS should address the low compliance with current regulations of large vessels in the Mid-Atlantic and Southeast around port entrances through targeted enforcement and outreach in these areas;
- NMFS should expand the timing and location of seasonal management areas in the Mid-Atlantic and Southeast to reflect recent shifts in right whale distribution and emerging sources of vessel strike risk;
- NMFS should expand the application of speed limits to vessels smaller than 65 feet in length in order to reduce the risk small vessels pose to right whales, and right whale calves in particular; and
- NMFS should strengthen the current dynamic management measures by making them mandatory and applying them to all right whale detections outside of the seasonal management areas.

The Report confirms that slowing vessels and separating vessels from whales remain the two most effective tools available to prevent collisions with right whales. Expanding the current vessel speed regulations as requested would address the concerns identified in the Report and provide essential protections at a pivotal moment for this highly endangered species. We urge NMFS to immediately take all available measures to address vessel strikes as one of the leading threats to the continued existence and recovery of the right whale.

I. BACKGROUND

A. North Atlantic Right Whales

North Atlantic right whales are primarily found in the western North Atlantic Ocean and use the entire East Coast for their habitat. Each fall, pregnant females travel more than 1,000 miles from their feeding areas in the waters off New England and Canada to the shallow, coastal waters off North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and northeastern Florida. The southeastern United States is the only known area where right whale females regularly give birth and nurse their young. Each spring, these mothers and new calves migrate back to foraging grounds in the Northeast.⁴ Federal critical habitat under the Endangered Species Act is designated for both the Northeast feeding and breeding grounds and the Southeast calving grounds.⁵ In addition, some non-reproductive North Atlantic right whales also migrate south, although at more variable times and in smaller numbers, while others appear to not migrate south at all, remaining instead in the northern feeding grounds year-round or traveling elsewhere.⁶

In addition to the species' critical habitat designation, NMFS scientists have also designated a Biologically Important Area ("BIA") for the species' calving grounds that extends from Cape Lookout, North Carolina to central Florida, recognizing the seasonal importance of this area for calving and reproduction.⁷ A BIA has also been designated for the Migratory Corridor stretching from Cape Cod Bay in Massachusetts to off central Florida, in recognition of this area's seasonal importance for migrating mothers and calves.⁸

Although habitat use in Mid-Atlantic waters is not well-understood, since 2010, scientists have observed right whales spending more time in the Mid-Atlantic year-round,⁹ and the agency itself now recognizes these areas as having year-round right whale presence.¹⁰ A recent study detected North Atlantic right whales in the waters off Virginia on approximately 10 percent of days throughout the year.¹¹ There is further evidence this area could be considered a seasonally important foraging area; NOAA data show a hot spot for Centropagidae copepods, on which North Atlantic right whales feed, off the coast of Virginia outside the whales' normal migratory season.¹²

i. The Perilous Status of the Population

As NMFS is well aware, the conservation status of the North Atlantic right whale is dire. Despite more than 50 years of federal protections,¹³ the species has never recovered to a sustainable level¹⁴ and indeed remains “one of the world’s most endangered large whale species.”¹⁵ Recent scientific analysis confirms that the population has been declining since 2010 due primarily to entanglements in commercial fishing gear and vessel strikes.¹⁶ In the wake of an alarming number of human-caused deaths of North Atlantic right whales in 2017, NMFS declared an Unusual Mortality Event (“UME”) under the Marine Mammal Protection Act for all U.S. waters in which right whales occur.¹⁷ This designation is still in effect. The leading causes of the UME are vessel strikes and fishing gear entanglements. At least 34 whales are known to have been killed since 2017, and an additional 15 animals have been documented with serious injuries from which they will likely not recover.¹⁸ Four of the 27 calves born during the last two calving seasons (2019-2021) have either been confirmed or presumed dead.¹⁹ However, recent scientific analysis estimated that observed carcasses account for only 29 percent of all estimated deaths since 2010, meaning the actual number of dead right whales since 2017 is likely to be more than three times higher.²⁰

Reg. 20,564 (Aug. 1, 1973), and are currently also listed as a "strategic" stock under the MMPA, see 16 U.S.C. § 1362(19).

The loss of at least 49 right whales since 2017 represents over 13 percent of the total population, which is now estimated at approximately 356 individuals.²¹ Of these 356 individuals, no more than 77 are breeding females.²² Females are particularly vulnerable to the lethal and sublethal effects of human activity, surviving to only 30-40 years of age, and with a current inter-calf interval of approximately ten years and growing.²³ Furthermore, poor body condition of individuals within the population, compared with that of southern right whales, is a major concern for the future viability of the population.²⁴ In 2019 the agency named the North

ii. The Ongoing Vessel Strike Crisis

Anthropogenic trauma is the leading cause of death for juvenile and adult North Atlantic right whales,²⁷ and NMFS scientists have found that “anthropogenic mortality has limited the recovery” of the right whale.²⁸ For the last decade, human-caused right whale mortalities have consistently exceeded—often by significant measure—the Potential Biological Removal (“PBR”) level for the species, which stands at merely 0.7.²⁹ The scientific community has sounded the alarm that “there is a clear and immediate need for expanding trauma reduction measures.”³⁰ Mortality and serious injury resulting from vessel strikes, along with fishing gear entanglements, are the two primary threats to the species.

Large whales are at risk of being struck and injured by a wide range of vessel types along the East Coast, including container ships, surveying and construction vessels for offshore wind projects, and military vessels, as well as fishing boats and recreational vessels. Injuries from vessel strikes can include blunt force trauma from being struck by the vessel hull, and/or laceration from being struck by the vessel propeller, depending on the type of vessel and where the whale is in the water column when it is struck.³¹ North Atlantic right whales are particularly prone to vessel strikes, given their slow speeds, overlapping range with shipping lanes, and extended time spent at or near the surface.³²

Since the establishment of the UME in 2017, of the 34 right whale serious injuries and mortalities for which cause could be determined, 13 were confirmed or suspected to be caused by vessel strikes, an average of three per year.³³ However, the number of recorded vessel collisions with large whales is likely to grossly underestimate the actual number of animals struck, as those struck but not recovered or thoroughly examined cannot be accounted for.³⁴ Indeed, as mentioned above, true vessel strike mortalities and serious injuries are likely to exceed the number observed by as much as a factor of three.³⁵ These numbers plainly demonstrate that without dramatically reducing this significant threat, the species faces a very real prospect of extinction.

Calves, juveniles, and females are disproportionately impacted by vessel strikes as they frequently rest and nurse in nearshore habitats and spend more time at or near the water's surface.³⁶ Since the start of 2020, three calves have died or are presumed dead from vessel strikes. On January 8, 2020, the newborn calf of right whale "Derecha" was seriously injured by a passing vessel off the coast of Georgia.³⁷ State wildlife biologists attempted to administer medication to the calf, but the prognosis for survival was poor, and the calf has not been seen since.³⁸ On June 25, 2020, a second calf was found dead off the coast of New Jersey, and necropsy later found that it had been struck twice, by a non-fatal strike first and a lethal strike several weeks later.³⁹ Given the close association between mothers and calves, adverse impacts to the mothers from these two events cannot be ruled out. Most recently, on February 13, 2021, the one-month old calf of right whale "Infinity" was reported stranded off St. Augustine, Florida after being struck by a fishing vessel.⁴⁰ Infinity was spotted a few days later with serious injuries from being struck by the same vessel, and from which she is not likely to survive.⁴¹

Numerous studies have found that slowing the speed of vessels reduces the risk of both serious injury and mortality from vessel collisions.⁴² In addition to reducing the severity of impact, slow speeds also allow both vessels and whales more maneuverability to avoid one another and may even reduce the probability of a collision happening at all.⁴³ The use of traffic routes to separate vessels from whales may also reduce vessel strike risk.⁴⁴ These key management tools are the most effective strategies available to prevent vessel collisions with right whales in U.S. waters.

B. The 2008 Vessel Speed Rule

In 2008, NMFS promulgated a final rule implementing vessel speed restrictions along the U.S. East Coast (“the Rule”).⁴⁵ NMFS promulgated the Rule to “reduce the occurrence and severity of vessel collisions with North Atlantic right whales,” thereby contributing to the preservation and recovery of the species and with the ultimate goal of “eliminat[ing] the threat of ship strikes...in the endangered population.”⁴⁶ The Rule was initially promulgated as a temporary rule with a five-year sunset clause before being made permanent in 2013.⁴⁷

The Rule established a mandatory 10-knot (nautical mile per hour) speed limit for all “large vessels” (i.e., 65 feet or greater in overall length), within designated Seasonal Management Areas (“SMA”). These comments will focus on the SMAs in the following regions:

1. Mid-Atlantic (migratory/calving grounds):
 - Chesapeake Bay (Nov. 1-Apr. 30), within a 20-nm radius of the Port
 - Morehead City (Nov. 1-Apr. 30), within a 20-nm radius of the Port
 - Wilmington, NC to Brunswick, GA (Nov. 1-Apr. 30), out to 20 nm along a contiguous strip (“North Carolina-Georgia”)
2. Southeast (calving/nursery grounds):
 - Georgia/Florida coast (Nov. 15-Apr. 15), within a core calving area

In addition, the Rule established a voluntary Dynamic Management Area (“DMA”) program, triggered when aggregations of three or more right whales are sighted in areas not covered by an active SMA.⁴⁸ Under the Rule, DMAs encompass areas with a radius of three nautical miles from the sighting of the whales. Mariners are asked, but not required, to avoid these areas altogether or to travel through them at a speed no faster than 10 knots.⁴⁹ Further, DMAs are temporary, lasting for only 15 days with a possible 15-day extension if whales are re-sighted in the same area.⁵⁰

II. NMFS MUST STRENGTHEN THE VESSEL SPEED RULE TO EFFECTIVELY PROTECT NORTH ATLANTIC RIGHT WHALES FROM VESSEL STRIKES

As part of its rulemaking to remove the sunset clause from the Rule, NMFS committed to publish and seek comment on a report evaluating the conservation value and economic and navigational safety impacts of the Rule.⁵¹ Accordingly, the agency’s Report, finalized in June 2020 and published in January 2021, evaluates the effectiveness of the Rule at reducing the incidence of right whale mortality and serious injury due to vessel strikes, and identifies areas for improvement. The Report evaluates four aspects of the 2008 Vessel Speed Rule: 1) mariner compliance, 2) biological efficacy, 3) impacts to navigational safety, and 4) economic cost to mariners.⁵² The Report also assesses general trends in vessel traffic characteristics of both large and small vessels within SMAs and offers recommendations for strengthening the Rule based on these findings.

The Report specifically finds that, overall, the Rule has made progress in reducing right whale vessel strike risk, based on a number of trends. First, the number of right whale mortalities from vessel strikes decreased after the Rule went into effect, demonstrating the effectiveness of the Rule in preventing life-threatening vessel strikes.⁵³ Second, the Report found a reduction in average large vessel speeds over time across all SMAs.⁵⁴ Third, compliance with the speed reduction measures steadily increased over time since the implementation of the Rule, reaching an overall high of 81% during the 2018-2019 season.⁵⁵ These findings suggest the Rule has been effective at reducing overall risk of serious injury and mortality from vessel strikes. Finally, the Report found no indication that the Rule has compromised navigational safety or economic activity.⁵⁶

Despite these positive findings regarding the Rule's effectiveness, the Report also finds that additional actions are warranted to reduce or eliminate lethal and injurious vessel collisions with right whales. Notably, while vessel strike mortalities decreased after the Rule's implementation, the number of both total vessel strikes and serious injuries actually increased after implementation of the Rule.⁵⁷ While the Report points out this could be explained by the inevitable increase in monitoring, detection, and reporting of vessel strikes that occurred post-implementation,⁵⁸ it is nonetheless a cause for concern and worthy of further investigation by the agency.

These findings merit enhancement of current management strategies. Fortunately, the Report highlighted many opportunities for this to occur. As detailed in the sections below, the Rule should be strengthened to address the following issues outlined in the Report: 1) low compliance of large vessels in the Mid- and South Atlantic; 2) shifts in right whale distribution and emerging sources of vessel traffic; 3) high transit speeds of small vessels along the East Coast; and 4) poor compliance with voluntary DMA measures. Indeed, when NMFS finalized the Rule in 2008, it stated that it would reconsider these specific provisions if they proved to be inadequate.⁵⁹ The Report shows that these conditions have been met. We accordingly urge ⁵⁹ NMFS specifically noted at the time of promulgation that it would consider: (1) “means, including future rulemaking, to address vessel classes below 65 ft,” 73 Fed. Reg. at 60,180; (2) “making [DMAs] mandatory, NMFS to use the data-driven lessons learned in the Report to take the following actions to address vessel strikes as one of the leading threats to right whales.

A. NMFS Should Address Low Compliance of Large Vessels in Mid-Atlantic and Southeast SMAs

Despite the fact that the Rule has been effective in reducing average large vessel speeds and that overall compliance levels in the SMAs are high, the variations in compliance among SMAs paints a less optimistic picture. According to the Report, “certain discrete areas of poor compliance stand out and require enhanced attention.”⁶⁰ Namely, the North Carolina-Georgia and Chesapeake SMAs showed the lowest compliance of all the SMAs, with mariners exceeding the mandatory speed limit in nearly one out of three and one out of four transits, respectively.⁶¹ In the North Carolina-Georgia SMA in particular, despite the 10-knot speed limit, worryingly high levels of large vessels traveling faster than 12 knots (20.73%) and even 15 knots (10.31%) were reported during the most recent season.⁶² In addition, noncompliance of large vessels was observed to be particularly spatially dense in the Mid-Atlantic region, specifically within the Chesapeake and New York SMAs.⁶³

Of greatest particular concern are the Report’s findings about the exceptionally low compliance with the speed limit around Southeast port entrances within SMAs. Since the Rule’s implementation in 2008, compliance around the entrances to the Ports of Charleston or Brunswick have never surpassed 20 percent, and compliance around the entrances to the Ports of Wilmington or Savannah have never surpassed 30 percent.⁶⁴ According to the Report, this noncompliance is of particular concern in Charleston and Savannah “given the higher levels of transit distance and longer entrance channels into these busy ports.”⁶⁵ These patterns are in stark contrast to the Northeast port entrances. During the most recent season (2018-19), compliance entering the Cape Cod Canal was 90.04 percent, while compliance entering the Charleston Port was 11.16 percent.⁶⁶ These results clearly show that right whales remain susceptible to lethal vessel strikes throughout much of the areas covered by the Rule.⁶⁷

We agree with the Report’s findings that NMFS should take immediate action to address the low compliance rates within Mid- and South Atlantic SMAs and around Southeast port entrances, starting with stronger enforcement and targeted outreach to mariners in these regions. The agency should also target specific vessel types with a history of low compliance in these areas. There is no reason why vessels in the Mid-Atlantic and Southeast cannot achieve the same high level of compliance as those in the Northeast.⁶⁸

Furthermore, even though the agency lacks a full understanding of the reason for low compliance in Southeast port entrances, the Report indicates that some vessels in these areas may be inappropriately using the safety exemption to avoid compliance with the speed limit.⁶⁹ We agree with the Report's recommendation that NMFS tighten the regulatory language regarding safety provisions to avoid any illegitimate use of this exemption. We also recommend the agency prioritize further investigation into the sources of noncompliance at Southeast port entrances.

B. NMFS Should Modify the Timing and Location of SMAs to Reflect Recent and Emerging Sources of Vessel Strike Risk

While the Report found that vessel strike risk has improved within SMAs, other studies have found that, outside active SMAs, the risk has increased.⁷⁰ This in part may reflect the fact that both right whale distribution and vessel traffic patterns are not static. In promulgating the 2008 rule, NMFS recognized the need to “continue to monitor right whale sighting locations relative to [SMA] boundaries” and to “modify [the boundaries], as appropriate, if changes are warranted based on shifts in right whale occurrence.”⁷¹ In fact, both right whale distribution and vessel traffic patterns have changed since then.⁷² We support and are encouraged to see NMFS's recommendation in the Report to consider modifying and expanding the SMAs to reflect these changes in right whale vessel strike risk. We recommend that NMFS consider expanding SMAs in the Mid-Atlantic and Southeast in particular to capture shifting habitat use by right whales, and to reflect the emerging threat of vessel traffic associated with offshore wind energy development in these areas.

First, NMFS should consider expanding the sizes of the SMAs to encompass areas that have experienced recurring DMAs since the implementation of the Rule. In the Southeast, for example, the Report shows a cluster of DMAs that were repeatedly triggered in one area off the coast of South Carolina and Georgia outside the nearby SMA between 2010 and 2019.⁷³ Given that DMA compliance is voluntary and disappointingly low, NMFS should address this gap in protections by extending the North Carolina-Georgia SMA out to 30 nautical miles. Indeed, NMFS originally proposed instituting a 30-nautical-mile buffer around southern ports in the 2006 proposed rule but ultimately chose not to do so in the final rule.⁷⁴ Since that time,

additional studies have shown that 30 nautical miles is the minimum distance required to protect right whales migrating in these areas; NMFS should therefore revisit this proposal.⁷⁵

Second, NMFS should expand the sizes of the SMAs to include wind energy areas which represent an emerging source of vessel strike risk to right whales. In the Mid-Atlantic, for example, NMFS should expand the Chesapeake SMA out to 45 nautical miles to reach the lease areas for two proposed offshore wind projects off the coast of Virginia and the Outer Banks of North Carolina. These are two of the largest offshore wind projects proposed for the East Coast and are accordingly likely to cause a significant increase in vessel traffic and vessel strike risk in this area. As discussed above, this area is an important migratory and potential foraging area for right whales. Indeed, Dominion recently reported sighting seven right whales inside its lease area while conducting year-round site characterization surveys for the Coastal Virginia Offshore Wind commercial project.⁷⁶

C. NMFS Should Address the Risk Small Vessels Pose to Right Whales

Since the promulgation of the Rule in 2008, NMFS has recognized that “vessels less than 65 ft (19.8 m) may pose a threat to right whales.”⁷⁷ Indeed, between 1999 and 2012, 61 percent of vessel strike injuries for which vessel size could be determined involved vessels less than 65 feet in length.⁷⁸ And since 2013, there have been at least ten right whales struck and injured by vessels confirmed or suspected to be under 65 feet in length in U.S. waters alone.⁷⁹ This represents 71 percent of all confirmed vessel collisions in U.S. waters during this time period, likely an underestimate as small vessel collisions with whales often go underreported.⁸⁰

The three most recent known incidents of vessel collisions with calves all involved vessels either confirmed or suspected to be smaller than 65 feet long.⁸¹ For example, the right whale calf and mother injured off St. Augustine, Florida in February 2021 were hit by a 54-foot fishing vessel traveling at a speed of 22 knots.⁸² The boat also sustained significant damage, taking on water and losing power upon impact and ultimately requiring rescue by the U.S. Coast Guard, demonstrating that small vessels striking right whales also pose a significant risk to human safety.⁸³

The Report shows that this threat is widespread and persistent. NMFS's analysis indicates that a "substantial amount" of small vessel traffic traveling faster than 10 knots is present in active SMAs, particularly in the Mid-Atlantic and Southeast.⁸⁴ This likely underestimates the magnitude of the threat, as small vessels are not subject to the Rule and are not required to use an automated identification system. In fact, NMFS concluded in the Report that "[g]iven the ubiquity of small...vessel traffic in some SMAs and the high speeds at which many travel, these vessel types may pose a particular threat to right whales."⁸⁵

We agree with the recommendation in the Report that NMFS should immediately address this problem, given the longstanding and documented risk that small vessels pose to right whales and particularly to vulnerable mothers and calves. In its 2008 final rule, NMFS promised it would "continue to consider means, including future rulemaking, to address vessel classes below 65 ft" should it become clear these vessels warranted regulation.⁸⁶ The time has come for NMFS to fulfill this commitment and amend the Rule to extend the current speed restrictions to vessels under 65 feet in length.

While we understand that the small vessel data presented in the Report are preliminary, and that more information is needed in order to develop uniquely suitable regulations governing this size class, the unprecedented number of recent right whale deaths and serious injuries nevertheless necessitates urgent action to address this threat. For example, the Report states that 40-65-foot vessels make up 85 percent of small vessel traffic in SMAs.⁸⁷ Given this overwhelming share of the risk small vessels pose to right whales, the agency should move promptly to address this vessel class size in particular. We further urge the agency to examine other aspects regarding the scope of this problem, including but not limited to: the most pervasive and fast-moving small vessel types in known right whale habitat, specific vessel sizes and speeds involved in documented strikes, and the areas within which small vessels pose the biggest risk to right whales.⁸⁸

D. NMFS Should Strengthen the DMA Program to be Mandatory and to Apply to all Right Whale Sightings

Finally, the Report found disappointingly low levels of compliance with the Rule's voluntary DMA measures. Since implementation of the Rule, large vessels continue to transit above 10 knots where right whales are known to have aggregated, posing an unacceptable risk to the species. Even though a total of 195 DMAs were declared in response to sightings of right whale aggregations outside the boundaries of active SMAs, data suggested that mariners often did not modify their routes to avoid these areas.⁸⁹ According to the Report, while vessel speeds within DMAs decreased some, this decrease "remains modest and fails to approach levels achieved in mandatory SMAs."⁹⁰

These findings show that as a voluntary program, DMAs do not provide substantial protections to right whales from vessel strikes.⁹¹ This conclusion echoes the findings of other assessments on the ineffectiveness of the voluntary speed restrictions.⁹² As it did with vessel sizes and SMA locations, NMFS in 2008 committed to strengthening the DMA provisions through future rulemaking "if adherence is not satisfactory."⁹³ Therefore, we urge NMFS to make the DMA program mandatory.

Furthermore, given the current dire status of the species, NMFS should consider requiring DMAs in every instance that a single animal is sighted or acoustically detected outside of an active SMA, not just when aggregations of three or more whales are observed. The recent death of a calf off New Jersey⁹⁴ indicates how even single or pairs of animals are at risk of vessel strike outside of SMAs. Although the mother-calf pair in question had been sighted and acoustically detected outside of an active SMA, no voluntary vessel speed reduction areas were triggered under current DMA regulations. This event demonstrates that the sighting of three or more North Atlantic right whales is too high of a bar to trigger a DMA. Moreover, the Report suggests that this high bar may lead to DMAs being under-protective in the Mid- and South Atlantic, where right whales are less likely to aggregate than in the North Atlantic.⁹⁵ At a minimum, the agency should expand the DMA requirement to include sightings of mother-calf pairs, to strengthen these protections in migratory and calving grounds and to prevent further losses of this vulnerable segment of the population.

III. CONCLUSION

The undersigned organizations, which have strong interests in protecting the North Atlantic right whale off the Mid-Atlantic and Southeast coasts, applaud the progress the agency has made in reducing vessel strike mortalities since the implementation of the 2008 Vessel Speed Rule. However, as the Report clearly shows, and for the reasons discussed above, it is critical that NMFS strengthen the current vessel speed regulations in order to reduce or eliminate a leading cause of death for the species. The cumulative impact of vessel strikes—in combination with the plethora of other threats right whales face—poses a daunting obstacle to the species' survival and recovery. NMFS should follow through on the promises it made in 2008 to expand the vessel speed regulations, based on the best available science, to ensure the continued survival and recovery of the species.

Thank you for your consideration of these comments.

Dear Dr. Caroline Good,

I am writing in response to the delayed report, North Atlantic Right Whale (Eubalaena glacialis) Vessel Speed rule Assessment, dated June 2020 but only just released in January of 2021. Along with the accidental entanglements in fishing gear, vessel strikes are preventing the recovery of this critically endangered species.

Without further action, we risk losing a species which is steeped in our history, our culture, and our own survival. Research demonstrates that right whales play an important ecological role by helping to sustain our marine ecosystem and our planet. I am encouraged that the agency acknowledges that the current suite of measures, in particular those which are voluntary, do not adequately protecting right whales in US waters.

I support the following findings in the report:

- Seasonal Management Areas should be modified in duration, seasonality, and location
- Further actions should include vessels under 65 feet in length.
- The Dynamic Management Area program should be modified as it does not reduce vessel strike risk substantially as a voluntary measure.
- Additional outreach and education to the boating and shipping community is needed.

The inclusion of vessels under 65 feet is not only important to right whales but is also an important measure for human safety. Just last year, a newborn right whale was struck twice by a small vessel, the second strike mercifully killing the whale who suffered mortal wounds from the initial impact. Small vessels involved in whale strikes have also suffered cracked hulls, damage to propellers and rudders, and blown engines. Passengers have been knocked off their feet or thrown from the boat upon impact with a whale.

I ask that you consider, at a minimum, the measures put forward in the 2020 petition for rulemaking submitted by Whale and Dolphin Conservation et al. including:

- extend vessel speed restrictions to vessels under 65 feet (19.8 meters)
- require mandatory vessel speed restrictions in all Dynamic Management Areas, and strengthen the trigger for Dynamic Management Areas to include any sighting of a cow/calf pair
- expand the Seasonal Management Area outside the ports of New York and New Jersey to 40 nautical miles, effective year-round, with dynamic vessel speed restrictions in areas of designated Traffic Separation Schemes
- expand the Block Island Seasonal Management Area to the east, and make the Seasonal Management Area effective year-round

- expand the Seasonal Management Area off Virginia out to 45 nautical miles
- expand all other Mid-Atlantic and Southeast Seasonal Management Areas out to 30 nautical miles
- combine the Off Race Point and Cape Cod Bay Seasonal Management Areas into a single management area effective January 1 through May 15
- maintain all other vessel speed restrictions not specifically revised as requested here¹² to prevent further mortality and injury resulting from incidental vessel strikes.

North Atlantic right whales can recover if the accidental threats posed by human activities are adequately reduced. Please give this species and our planet a chance to thrive by implementing meaningful measures based on the most current and best available science.

Sincerely,

Re: The Right Whale Vessel Speed Rule Assessment, June 2020 report evaluating the conservation value and economic and navigational safety impacts of the 2008 North Atlantic right whale vessel speed regulations (50 CFR § 224.105)

Dear Dr. Goode:

My name is Julie Albert and I have worked with North Atlantic right whales off the coast of Florida in their calving ground for 21 years. I train a local volunteer sighting network to report sightings of right whales in order to mitigate human impacts from vessel strikes, close approaches by boaters, and other anthropogenic effects. I am writing in response to your call for comments for consideration as you 'evaluate the need for future actions or modifications to our vessel strike reduction efforts.'

On behalf of Marine Resources Council (MRC), I would like to express our concern that the current measures in the final rule to implement speed restrictions (10/10/2008, 73 FR 60173) are no longer enough to prevent the deaths of North Atlantic right whales.

Marine Resources Council highly recommends the following changes to the current Right Whale Vessel Speed Rule:

1. Reduced speeds of 10 knots should apply to vessels 30 feet or more in general, and vessels of any length in the southeast critical habitat area/calving ground.

With the recent loss of Infinity's (Catalog #3230) calf on Feb. 12, 2021 due to the vessel strike of a 54-foot sport fishing vessel entering St. Augustine Inlet, Florida at 21 knots, MRC recommends that the 10-knot vessel speed apply to all vessels in all critical habitat areas/SMAs, no matter what size. The loss of this 2-month old right whale calf was devastating, as was the propeller injuries sustained by Infinity herself, a reproductively active female, at the same time. The calf sustained sharp trauma to its head and left flank, with propeller cuts transecting its blowhole and left lung. Blunt force trauma caused a shattered skull and five broken ribs.

The sport fishing vessel that struck Infinity and her calf was not required to reduce its speed because of its size. If it had been transiting at 10 knots, Infinity's calf would likely be alive and she might not have sustained propeller cuts that might kill her or prevent her from reproducing again as soon as she would have otherwise. The importance of protecting reproductively active females and their offspring, the future of the species, in the calving ground simply cannot be overstated.

2. Expand current Seasonal Management Areas (SMAs) to include the entire critical habitat area in both the northeast and southeast United States.

The North Atlantic right whale critical habitat areas were established because they are essential to the conservation of the species. Reduced vessel speeds should be required throughout the critical habitat areas, not just in seasonal management areas. If an area is crucial enough to be considered 'critical habitat,' then protect it with mandatory reduced 10-knot vessel speeds throughout the entire area.

Expanding the southeast SMA off the coast of Florida southward to include the entire southeast critical habitat area would include mandatory vessel speeds for Port Canaveral, the second largest cruising port in the world. According to my research, vessel speeds of 10-12 knots for cruise ships in the Canaveral ship channel are already adhered to much of the time. However, SpaceX vessels have been seen transiting at much higher speeds.

I've witnessed whales dodging vessel traffic in and out of Port Canaveral. On one occasion, two whales crossed the channel during 30-min. intervals of four cruise ship departures. They crossed between ships two and three. While the relationship between MRC's Right Whale Conservation Program and Port Canaveral's harbor pilots is strong, it needs to be considered that there might be right whales in the vicinity at times that we might not know about.

3. Enforce the 10-knot speed rule by requiring offenders to time spent in port/dockside in addition to/in lieu of a fine.

Major shipping companies will continue to ignore mandatory ship speeds if they believe they can just pay a fine for violating the law in order to continue doing business, even if it means continuing to violate the vessel speed rule. If they have the resources to pay the fines and speeding through SMAs is still more profitable for them after paying the fine, they will continue to do it. SpaceX is another company that will certainly consider doing this. However, time is money. Forcing vessels to delay departures/arrivals as a consequence of ignoring the 10-knot speed rule will be costly, and it is more easily enforceable while at the dock than it is on the open ocean.

4. Dynamic Management Areas (DMAs) should have MANDATORY reduced vessel speeds of 10 knots.

Just encouraging mariners to avoid these areas or recommending a reduced speed is not enough to protect North Atlantic right whales. The 10-knot vessel speed should be mandatory and enforced. Right whales don't have any time left for voluntary measures.

5. DMAs should be triggered with the presence of a single right whale.

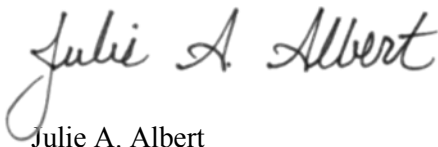

Current DMAs are triggered by the presence of three or more right whales. With the Potential Biological Removal (PBR) of right whales being 0.9, a single animal should be enough to warrant a DMA to be triggered. Please reduce the current number of right whales necessary to trigger a DMA from three to one.

- 6. DMAs that have been triggered with an extension and/or overlap a critical habitat area should be considered for mandatory vessel speed reduction to 10 knots.

DMAs that have been triggered in similar areas over many years, and DMAs that were triggered more than once during a single season because right whales remained in the area more than 15 days, should be considered to be included in a SMA for mandatory reduced vessel speed.

Thank you for this opportunity to comment on your findings. MRC appreciates your consideration to help better protect North Atlantic right whales in the future. Please implement changes as soon as possible.

Sincerely,

Dr. Caroline Good, Office of Protected Resources:

Within the language of the speed regulation, there is a navigational safety exception provision (NSEP), a discretionary management feature, which permits ship operators to exceed the speed limit in inclement weather, but which appears to have been utilized in nearly every transit in our study, thereby suggesting that the NSEP is undermining the effectiveness of the regulation. Our findings indicate that the compliance with the mandatory 10 knot speed restriction in the Charleston and Savannah port areas approached zero during our study timeframe. We see high ship speed distributed along the Charleston and Savannah entrance channels, entirely within the SMA, with pilots at the helm. The compliance report, linked below, contrasts the effectiveness of the SMAs generally with our analysis of the MAUS SMA at Charleston and Savannah. We suggest that self-regulatory compliance will not alone achieve policy and management objectives to reduce the incidence and severity of ship collisions with right whales in this critical section of the MAUS SMA. Modification to the rules, developed with specific, accurate information and stakeholder input, monitoring and enforcement, may allow regulators to achieve previously elusive policy and management objectives.

Please include the following into the written public comments. The first is a link to the compliance report pdf, which I presented in brief at the last two annual meetings of NARWC. The second link is to the Maritime Whale webpage, providing up-to-date information pertaining to pilotage in the Charleston and Savannah entrance channels during the November 1, 2020 through April 30, 2021 SMA season.

Regarding: NOAA Efforts to Reduce Vessel Strikes to North Atlantic Right Whales

Dr. Caroline Good,

Matanzas Riverkeeper is a nonprofit organization based in St. Augustine, FL that works to protect the health of the Guana, Tolomato, Matanzas watershed through advocacy, education, and community engagement. It is in this spirit that we write with deep concern that the North Atlantic right whale is on a path to extinction unless bold action is taken. Every new generation of right whales are born off the warm coastal waters of northern Florida and the southeast United States and we want to do all we can to make sure that continues.

According to most recent estimates there are less than 360 right whales left on earth and less than a quarter of those are breeding age females. Since 2017, 47 known right whale deaths have been documented – including the tragic death of a new born calf right in our own backyard here in St. Augustine a couple of weeks ago when a 54-foot sportfishing boat struck the calf and its mother.

While we appreciate NOAA's efforts to reduce the likelihood of deaths and serious injuries to these endangered whales that result from collisions with vessels, more aggressive action is necessary. NOAA's vessel speed restrictions limit vessels measuring 65-feet or longer to travel at 10 knots or less in Seasonal Management Areas. Unfortunately, the above referenced collision proves that vessels well below 65-feet pose a deadly threat to right whales. We urge you to expand the speed regulations in Seasonal Management Areas to apply to vessels 33-feet and above since vessels as small as 33-feet have struck and killed whales in the past.

Furthermore, the boundaries of the Southeast Seasonal Management Area need to be expanded in order to adequately protect right whales and their newborn calves off the Florida coast. The southernmost boundary of the Southeast Seasonal Management Area ranges to the south by latitude 29°45'N. As I write these comments, a mother/ calf pair is currently off the coast near the Matanzas Inlet, roughly 3 miles south of the Southeast Seasonal Management Area boundary. Throughout this month, mother/ calf pairs have been frequenting coastal waters ranging down to Flagler Beach, some 25 miles outside of the Southeast Seasonal Management Area. For these reasons, we urge you to expand the southernmost boundary of the Southeast Seasonal Management Area to expand at least an additional 25 miles to the south.

In light of the dwindling number of surviving right whales, bold action is needed to save this species from extinction. We urge you to strengthen the proposed regulation to adequately protect this species before it is too late. Thank you for providing an opportunity to share input.

Sincerely,

Jen Lomberk, Esq.

Re: Defenders of Wildlife petition comment on North Atlantic Right Whale (Enbalaena glacialis)
Vessel Speed Rule Assessment (June 2020)

Dear Dr. Good,

On behalf of the 13,474 members and supporters of Defenders of Wildlife whose signatures are attached, please accept this petition comment on the Assessment. The text of the petition comment is as follows:

As an advocate for endangered species, I urge the National Marine Fisheries Service to expand the vessel speed rule on the East Coast to protect critically endangered right whales, in particular vulnerable calves and mother whales.

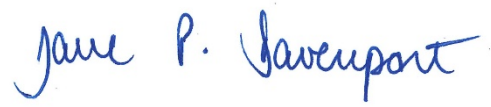

North Atlantic right whales are being driven to extinction by vessel strikes and entanglements in fishing gear. Scientists estimate that only around 350 of these whales remained at the end of 2020.

Just last month, another newborn whale calf was found dead with propeller wounds on a Florida beach, and its mother was seriously injured and likely to die as well. It's the third right whale calf killed by vessels in U.S. waters in little more than a year. With so few right whales remaining, every one of these tragic deaths threatens the survival of this species.

Expanding the vessel slow-down rule to create additional slow-down zones and apply the rule to smaller vessels would limit the number of vulnerable calves and breeding females killed and protect human life and safety as well. Ensuring more right whales survive to maturity is critical to this population's recovery.

I'm asking you to take urgent and long-delayed action to protect North Atlantic right whales from deadly vessel strikes. Please expand vessel slow-down zones along the East Coast and apply the rule to smaller vessels to save these whales while their survival and recovery are still possible.

Very truly yours,

Re: Comment on Final Report for Right Whale Speed Rule Assessment

Dear Dr. Good,

Thank you for the opportunity to provide comments on behalf of the International Fund for Animal Welfare (IFAW) regarding the final report on the June 2020 Right Whale Speed Rule Assessment, released in January 2021. While the report is considered final, we do appreciate your agency's request for additional comment and recommendations as you consider ways to strengthen the rule in order to increase the protection of right whales from vessel strikes.

North Atlantic right whales (NARW) are one of the most endangered marine species in the world with an estimated 356 individuals and fewer than 90 breeding females.¹ The primary threats contributing to such low population numbers are vessel strikes and entanglement in fishing gear with almost 90 percent of mortality from 2003 to 2018 being attributed to just these two threats where cause of death could be determined.² Since 2017, when the current right whale Unusual Mortality Event was declared, 49 right whales (or 13.5 percent of the known population) have died or are presumed to have died – alarming scientists, policymakers, and advocates working to protect this critically endangered species.³

Tragically, within the past 14 months, there have been three calves that were killed or seriously injured by vessel strikes in U.S. waters along with one of the calf's mother "Infinity" (a 19yr. old first-time mother) also being seriously injured from a vessel strike.⁴ Even more horrendous is that one of the calves that was killed had been struck twice in a span of a few weeks.⁵ These four cases represent an egregious exceedance of the right whale Potential Biological Removal, which is currently fewer than one non-natural mortality per year, and is just another dire indicator that the population is in free fall and that stronger vessel speed risk reduction measures must be enacted in order to preserve this species and ensure NOAA's compliance with both the Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA) and the Endangered Species Act (ESA).

We therefore recommend the following three modifications to the speed rule in order to strengthen protections for right whales of all age classes from all vessel types:

1. Extend mandatory vessel speed restrictions of 10kts. or less to vessels under 65 feet in Seasonal Management Areas (SMAs) – In acknowledging the right whale ship speed rule has been effective overall at reducing mortality and serious injury from large vessels (greater than 65), it has unfortunately failed to provide critical protection to right whales (particularly calves) from those vessels below 65 feet. For at least one of the recent calves killed by vessel strike, it was confirmed that the vessel responsible for the mortality was a 54ft. recreational sport fishing vessel going approx. 21kts.⁶ Under the current rule, this vessel is fully exempt from any violation. Any re-evaluation of the particular length appropriate under 65 feet to require a 10kt. or less speed should include a robust examination of all documented strikes along with an analysis of the various types of vessels normally operating in established and emerging right whale habitats.
2. Make Dynamic Management Areas (DMAs) mandatory 10kts. or less speed restriction – Recent data has shown that vessels over 65ft. routinely violate the voluntary 10kt. speed reduction requirement mandated by DMA determination within critical right whale foraging habitat.⁷ Making these DMAs mandatory will increase compliance and reduce the risk to lethal vessel strikes in critical areas important for right whale feeding, and mating.
3. Expand Current Seasonal Management Area geographic ranges to account for new or emerging feeding and calving habitat – With the newly established feeding areas south of Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket, an eastward expansion of the current Block Island SMA to encompass this emerging year-round critical habitat would increase protection for right whales. Likewise for the calving grounds, expanding southward along the Florida coastline and northward through South Carolina.⁸ This would add much needed protection for mothers and their newborn calves as they continue to utilize more of the southeastern coastal waters for bonding before making the treacherous journey up the east coast into the feeding areas of Cape Cod Bay and adjacent waters.

Research team, located on Cape Cod, is a leader in right whale mortality investigation and provides on the ground expertise to evaluate causes of death in this critically endangered species. Realizing from this work the true causes and that long-term solutions are needed, IFAW's campaign to protect and save North Atlantic right whales is founded on our desire to seek out collaborative, pragmatic solutions that bring together diverse stakeholders in pursuit of meaningful change on the water.

As referenced in the final speed rule report, our longstanding collaborative work with Stellwagen Bank National Marine Sanctuary (SBNMS) on promoting Corporate Social Reasonability within the shipping industry through the ship speed report card program has increased compliance across all vessel types within the Cape Cod Bay/Race Point SMA.⁹ In addition to the ship speed report card program (and noted on NOAA's vessel strike reduction webpage), our situational awareness mobile app Whale Alert (in collaboration with SBNMS) has been a key at-sea tool for mariners to identify the various speed restriction areas as well as locating and submitting whale sightings through the app platform in order to alert vessels which areas to avoid.

Thank you again for the opportunity to comment and for the hard work you, and the rest of NOAA Fisheries, are undertaking for this urgent conservation challenge. IFAW scientists and experts would be pleased to engage with you and your staff in whatever ways would be helpful.

Sincerely,

Brian Sharp

Re: North Atlantic Right Whale (Eubalaena glacialis) Vessel Speed Rule Assessment (June 2020)

Dear Dr. Good:

On behalf of the Center for Biological Diversity, Conservation Law Foundation, Defenders of Wildlife, Humane Society of the United States, Humane Society Legislative Fund, Whale and Dolphin Conservation and our millions of supporters and members, we offer the following comments regarding the North Atlantic Right Whale (Eubalaena glacialis) Vessel Speed Rule Assessment (June 2020).¹ Our organizations support the Assessment's recommendations and agree that there is an "urgent need for effective enhancements to the speed rule,"² however, an action plan with a target date for completion of the necessary rulemaking is notably absent from the Assessment. Completion of the necessary rulemaking must be a top priority of the Biden-Harris administration as it is one of two main threats driving this critically endangered species to the brink of extinction.

We urge the National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS) to immediately: (1) initiate rulemaking immediately, consistent with our "Petition for Rulemaking to Prevent Deaths and Injuries of Critically Endangered North Atlantic Right Whales from Vessel Strikes," submitted on August 6, 2020 (and attached to this letter); and (2) expeditiously propose, evaluate, and finalize an expanded vessel speed rule to ensure that the species can survive and recover.

² Assessment at 36.

Despite nearly 50 years of federal protections, the North Atlantic right whale (Eubalaena glacialis) has not recovered and is, once again, declining. Indeed, it is one of the most endangered large whales in the world, with fewer than 360 individuals in the population. While the species faces a plethora of stressors, collisions with marine vessels remain one of the two primary threats to its continued existence. Since 2017, just over half of the known or suspected causes of observed mortality for the species have been attributed to vessel strikes, closely followed by incidental entanglements in fishing gear.³ Without dramatically reducing these threats, the species faces a very real prospect of extinction.

1. Background

NMFS first promulgated regulations implementing vessel speed restrictions in specific areas and seasons along the U.S. East Coast in 2008 and subsequently made them permanent in 2013. The initial data suggested that these measures reduced the risk of vessel strikes to the species by nearly 90 percent.⁴ However, NMFS also specifically noted at the time of promulgation that it would consider: (1) “means, including through future rulemaking, to address vessel classes below 65 ft;”⁵ (2) making Dynamic Management Areas mandatory if adherence to the voluntary measures were not satisfactory;⁶ and (3) “modify[ing] [the size of Seasonal Management Areas], as appropriate, if changes are warranted based on shifts in right whale occurrence or additional analysis.”⁷ Furthermore, these data were based on the historic distribution of right whales, which has significantly changed since 2010, likely due to a changing climate impacting the location and quality of prey for the species.⁸

While a reduction in serious injuries and mortalities from vessel strikes has been documented since the implementation of the ship speed rule in U.S. waters, subsequent analysis and deaths demonstrate the necessity of expanding the rule. Indeed, NMFS itself has concluded that “[r]ight whales continue to face the risk of being struck by vessels throughout their range.”⁹

Numerous studies evaluating the rule recommend that the boundaries of current Seasonal Management Areas (SMAs) be expanded,¹⁰ noting that the voluntary vessel speed restrictions in

Dynamic Management Areas (DMAs) are ineffective in reducing vessel strikes as compliance with voluntary restrictions is poor.¹¹

In fact, since 2013, when the current rule was made permanent, at least 14 right whale collisions have been documented in U.S. waters, seven of which NMFS has determined are serious injuries or mortalities (Table 1). In the majority of these cases, vessels under 65 feet (19.8 meters) in length were either known to have been involved or cannot be ruled out as the source of the collision. These are in addition to the eight known mortalities resulting from vessel strikes in Canadian waters since 2017.¹² Given the best available data that, between 2010–2017, over two-thirds of right whale mortalities were not observed,¹³ more than these 14 right whales have been seriously injured and/or killed by vessel collisions since 2013. Reported collisions alone exceed the potential biological removal (PBR) for this species on a five-year average, and this threat continues to threaten the survival and impede the recovery of right whales.¹⁴

It is important to note that Knowlton and Costidis (2013)¹⁶ found that juveniles (i.e., calves to eight years old) and females are disproportionately impacted by vessel strikes. Additionally, of the 39 cases for which the scientists could determine vessel size, 56 percent (22) involved vessels under 65 feet (19.8 meters) in length.¹⁷

In the last two years, three North Atlantic right whale calves are known to have been killed or seriously injured by vessel strikes in U.S. waters alone; one mother has been added to the serious injury list and another has not been sighted since the strike occurred.¹⁸ Information that has come to light since promulgation of the 2008 and 2013 ship speed rules demonstrates that mandatory vessel speed limits in areas where right whales and vessels overlap is the only mechanism likely to effectively address such threats. Accordingly, it is imperative that NMFS not just analyze these issues but take immediate action to prevent and mitigate the significant and continuing threat of vessel strikes by initiating and expediting rulemaking to expand the vessel speed rule's protections for critically imperiled right whales.

2. NMFS is legally obligated to act.

NMFS promulgated the ship speed rule in 2008 to “reduce the occurrence and severity of vessel collisions with North Atlantic right whales,” thereby contributing to the preservation and recovery of the species “while minimizing adverse impacts on ship operations.”¹⁹ In 2013, NMFS stated that it intended to conduct periodic reviews of the rule and consider modifications based on its assessments.²⁰ This Assessment is the first to review the efficacy of the rule since it was made permanent in 2013 and such “modifications” are long overdue. Its conclusions—that compliance with mandatory speed limits is low in certain areas (below 25% in SMAs around four Southeast ports), that compliance with voluntary speed limits is spotty at best (below 50% in the mid-Atlantic), that additional areas need to have restrictions, and that small vessel traffic is a source of additional mortality as well as non-lethal vessel collision injuries—all demand immediate action.²¹

a. Endangered Species Act

Enacted in 1973, the ESA is a broad statutory scheme designed to protect endangered and threatened species and conserve the habitats upon which they depend.²² Considered “the most comprehensive legislation for the preservation of endangered species ever enacted by any nation,” the ESA embodies the “plain intent of Congress . . . to halt and reverse the trend toward species extinction, whatever the cost.”²³

To that end, Section 2(c) establishes that it is the “policy of Congress that all Federal departments and agencies shall seek to conserve endangered species and threatened species and shall utilize their authorities in furtherance of the purposes [of the ESA].”²⁴ Similarly, Section 7(a)(1) mandates that all federal agencies, “utilize their authorities in furtherance of the purposes of [the ESA] by carrying out programs for the conservation of endangered species and threatened species.”²⁵ The ESA defines “conserve” as “the use of all methods and procedures which are necessary to bring any endangered species or threatened species to the point at which the measures provided pursuant to th[e] Act are no longer necessary.”²⁶ “Section 7 substantially amplifies the obligation of federal agencies to take steps within their power to carry out the purposes of” the ESA.²⁷

In addition, Section 4(f) specifically requires that NMFS “develop and implement plans (. . . referred to as ‘recovery plans’) for the conservation and survival of endangered species.”²⁸ Consistent with the intent that recovery plans actually be implemented, Congress required that recovery plans “incorporate . . . a description of such site-specific management actions as may be necessary to achieve the plan’s goal for the conservation and survival of the species.”²⁹ The Recovery Plan for the North Atlantic right whale explicitly requires NMFS “to reduce or eliminate” mortality and injuries from vessel strikes, and concludes that “rigorous and urgent action is needed to reduce these threats.”³⁰ Thus, for NMFS to meet its mandates under Sections 2, 4, and 7 of the ESA, the agency must take additional action aimed at reducing the continuing threat of right whale injury and death from vessel strikes.

Collisions with vessels are not only threatening the survival and recovery of the North Atlantic right whale, but the mortalities and injuries that result from such collisions are themselves unlawful. The ESA prohibits the unauthorized “take” of an endangered species.³¹ The ESA defines take to include engaging in or attempting to engage in conduct that will “harass, harm, pursue, hunt, shoot, wound, kill, trap, capture, or collect” an individual of a listed species.³² Vessel strikes resulting in the injury or death of a right whale take whales in violation of Section 9 of the ESA. The ownership, operation, and authorization of vessels that take right whales have occurred, and continue to occur, without any permit from NMFS authorizing such takes. NMFS must therefore further regulate the operations of vessels within right whale habitat to eliminate these illegal takes.³³

Such an act may include significant habitat modification or degradation which actually kills or injures fish or wildlife by significantly impairing essential behavioral patterns, including, breeding, spawning, rearing, migrating, feeding or sheltering.” 50 C.F.R. § 222.102.

³³ See 16 U.S.C. § 1540(f) (authorizing NMFS to “promulgate such regulations as may be appropriate to enforce” the mandates of the ESA).

b. The Marine Mammal Protection Act

Similar to the ESA, the MMPA requires NMFS to “prescribe such regulations as are necessary and appropriate to carry out the purposes of [the statute].”³⁴ In enacting the MMPA, Congress declared that “marine mammals have proven themselves to be resources of great international significance, esthetic and recreational as well as economic” and “that they should be protected and encouraged to develop to the greatest extent feasible commensurate with sound policies of resource management and that the primary objective of their management should be to maintain the health and stability of the marine ecosystem.”³⁵ The MMPA seeks to maintain stable, functioning marine ecosystems, to secure and restore healthy marine mammal populations,³⁶ and to protect individual animals from harm.³⁷

To achieve these goals, the MMPA establishes a “moratorium on the taking” of marine mammals,³⁸ and specifically forbids “any person . . . or any vessel or other conveyance subject to the jurisdiction of the United States to take any marine mammal on the high seas;” “any person or vessel or other conveyance to take any marine mammal in waters or on lands under the jurisdiction of the United States;” and any person from “us[ing] any port, harbor, or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States to take or import marine mammals or marine mammal products.”³⁹ The statute broadly defines take to mean “to harass, hunt, capture, or kill, or attempt to harass, hunt, capture, or kill any marine mammal.”⁴⁰

Vessel strikes resulting in the injury, death, or harassment of a right whale are clearly “taking” whales in violation of the MMPA. Moreover, the take via mortality or serious injury of even one right whale by a vessel collision exceeds PBR and will, by definition, impede recovery and preclude the species from reaching its optimum sustainable population. Therefore, the MMPA clearly provides the mandate for NMFS to establish additional regulatory measures designed to reduce the threat of vessel strikes within right whale habitat and thereby effectuate the purpose of the statute.⁴¹

³⁴ Id. § 1382(a).

³⁵ Id. § 1361(6).

³⁶ Id. § 1361(2).

³⁷ See e.g., id. § 1362(18)(A) (defining “harassment” to include acts that affect “a marine mammal or marine mammal stock in the wild”) (emphasis added); id. § 1372(b) (requiring that authorized take of a marine mammal be humane); Animal Welfare Institute v. Kreps, 561 F.2d 1002, 1007 (D.C. Cir. 1977) (“the MMPA is an unusual statute . . . motivated by considerations of humaneness toward animals, who are uniquely incapable of defending their own interests”).

³⁸ 16 U.S.C. § 1371(a).

³⁹ Id. § 1372(a).

⁴⁰ Id. § 1362(13) (emphasis added); see also id. § 1362(18)(A) (definition of “harassment”).

3. Petitions⁴² for Rulemaking to Prevent Deaths and Injuries of Critically Endangered North Atlantic Right Whales from Vessel Strikes

On August 6, 2020, our organizations petitioned NMFS to utilize its authorities under the ESA and MMPA to initiate rulemaking to amend and expand the ship speed rule, including by taking the following actions:

- extend vessel speed restrictions to vessels under 65 feet (19.8 meters);
- require mandatory vessel speed restrictions in all DMAs, and strengthen the trigger for DMAs to include any sighting of a cow/calf pair;
- expand the SMA outside the ports of New York and New Jersey to 40 nautical miles, effective year-round, with dynamic vessel speed restrictions in areas of designated Traffic Separation Schemes;
- expand the Block Island SMA to the east, and make the SMA effective year-round;
- expand the SMA off Virginia out to 45 nautical miles;
- expand all other Mid-Atlantic and Southeast SMA out to 30 nautical miles;
- combine the Off Race Point and Cape Cod Bay SMAs into a single management area effective January 1 through April 30; and
- maintain all other vessel speed restrictions not specifically revised as requested⁴³ to prevent further mortality and injury resulting from incidental vessel strikes.

Nearly all of these measures are contemplated in the Assessment.⁴⁴ While there may be a “decline in the total number of documented vessel strike mortalities” since the rule went into effect, the Assessment’s finding that there has been an “increase in serious and non-serious injuries”⁴⁵ demands action, not further analysis.

For example, the Assessment recommends “consideration” of the region south of Nantucket and Martha’s Vineyard as an SMA.⁴⁶ Further consideration is unnecessary. NMFS’s expert working group recently identified this area as a core year-round foraging habitat for right whales,⁴⁷ NMFS is proposing to close this area to trap/pot fishing for several months of the year due to high right whale abundance,⁴⁸ and NMFS is prohibiting pile driving for several months of the year and requiring enhanced monitoring to mitigate the threat of ocean noise and vessel strikes in this region due to offshore wind projects.⁴⁹ NMFS has more than ample information available to justify establishing this area as an SMA (and applying mandatory speed restrictions to DMAs in any periods of the year not covered by the SMA).

The Assessment also recommends “further” action to address vessel strike risk from small vessel, similar to the measures enacted in Cape Cod Bay (all vessels) and the Gulf of Saint Lawrence (vessels greater than 13 meters).⁵⁰ NMFS should analyze its most recent data and decide upon an appropriate limitation so that this size limitation can be put out for public comment as part of a proposed rule as soon as possible. Furthermore, we urge NMFS to review the right whale data used in the recently-published proposed rule to amend the Atlantic Large Whale Take Reduction Plan as well. Logic dictates that if right whales are at risk of entanglement in these locations, they are also at risk from vessel strikes.

To the extent the Assessment recommends modification of the DMA program from its current format, our organizations agree that the DMA program must be modified and expanded to significantly increase its effectiveness. We do not agree, however, that NMFS needs to “evaluate the DMA program” any further. The agency has repeatedly concluded that compliance with voluntary measures is low.⁵¹ In the Assessment, the agency stated: “Mariner cooperation with voluntary speed recommendations in DMAs is generally low and as such, likely does not provide a substantive reduction in vessel strike risk.”⁵² A simple solution is to amend the vessel speed rule to make the vessel speed restrictions within DMAs mandatory, rather than voluntary, and alert mariners to that change to provide more meaningful protections. Additionally, NMFS should expand the rule to trigger mandatory DMAs upon sighting of cow-calf pairs, as the three calf mortalities within the last 14 months so compellingly illustrate.

Our organizations also agree that “enhance[d] enforcement” is necessary.⁵³ Past safety exemptions should be analyzed, and the language tightened, so that this is no longer an obvious loophole for compliance. Further, to the extent certain sectors (container ship and other ocean going vessels (OGVs)) cannot reasonably be expected to sight a whale or maneuver to avoid one, they should be proactively spaced and slowed to less than 10 knots in all places where right whales are or are expected to be present.

4. The Economic Analysis

The retrospective analysis provided by Industrial Economics, Inc. (IEc) underscores that the economic impact of the 2008 vessel speed rule has been minimal to marine vessel operators and has had no economic impact on potentially affected ports.⁵⁴ The Assessment summarizes the issues as follows:

Shipping activity at U.S. ports is influenced by many factors, including global economic conditions. Given these considerations, a cursory review of the type presented here is insufficient to support definitive conclusions concerning the potential impacts of the Rule on shipping activity. Nonetheless, this review provides no prima facie evidence that the promulgation of the Rule has led to substantial impacts on shipping activity. Overall, the value of goods entering and leaving East Coast ports recovered following the recession and has remained relatively constant over the past decade. Similarly, the number of vessels entering ports on the East Coast has remained relatively constant over time, both by port and in aggregate. Thus, a high-level review of the data suggests the Rule has not had a readily observable effect on the volume or value of economic activity at potentially affected ports.

Relying on 2017 AIS data, the analysis is based on “observed vessel transits and operating speeds, both for the period when the speed restrictions were in effect and when they were not,” rather than full compliance as previous analyses had been.⁵⁵ Even so, the Assessment acknowledges that, despite some data gaps, there are cost savings when a vessel goes slower:

For OGV’s, fuel costs can make up a substantial proportion of a vessel’s operating costs and vessel fuel consumption generally increases exponentially with increasing speed. Unfortunately, detailed fuel consumption data were unavailable so estimates were based on a vessel’s service speed, usually well in excess of 10 knots. As a result, fuel consumption, and therefore also OGV operating costs, were likely overestimated given the reduced speeds at which OGVs transit active SMAs. Actual OGV operating costs would likely be lower at reduced speeds, with less fuel consumption.⁵⁶

While neither the Assessment nor its Economic Analysis discuss potential climate benefits for expanding vessel speed restrictions, this would be another expected outcome. In proposing and finalizing a rulemaking to expand the vessel speed rule, NMFS must consider the ameliorative effects of reducing vessel speeds on vessel emissions linked to climate change, consistent with this administration’s policy expressed in President Biden’s Executive Order on Tackling the Climate Crisis at Home and Abroad (Jan. 27, 2021). As a 2012 study found: “regulated speed reduction is the most cost effective way to reduce ship emissions, and implemented correctly, it is cost free to the shipping industry as a whole and entails marginal incremental logistic and supply chain costs to consumer.”⁵⁷ Subsequent analyses have confirmed the climate and environmental benefits of reduced ship speeds, including reductions in greenhouse gases, heat-trapping black carbon emissions, air pollution, and underwater noise pollution.⁵⁸

The economic analysis also states that its data and methods could be used to evaluate modifications to the rule that would provide additional protections for North Atlantic right whales, including these alternatives:

- Designating new SMAs;
- Changing the spatial or temporal extent of established SMAs;
- Revising the Rule’s specification of vessels that are subject to speed restrictions;
- Changing the maximum permissible speed within SMAs; or
- Establishing mandatory limits on vessel speed within DMAs.⁵⁹

NMFS must act expeditiously to move forward with a rulemaking to analyze and implement these and other modifications to the vessel speed rule as outlined above.

5. Conclusion

NMFS is legally obligated under the ESA and MMPA to protect North Atlantic right whales from further take resulting from vessel strikes. Information that has come to light since promulgation of the 2008 and 2013 ship speed rules—including information contained in NMFS’s 2020 Assessment and its associated economic analysis—demonstrates that mandatory vessel speed limits in areas where right whales and vessels overlap is the only mechanism likely to effectively address such threats. It is unfortunate that NMFS provides this Assessment without any plan for action in the near future. We urge NMFS to initiate and expedite rulemaking to expand the vessel speed rule, including by taking the actions requested in our attached petition to prevent and mitigate the significant and continuing threat of vessel strikes to the survival and recovery of the North Atlantic right whale.

Dear Dr. Good,

Environment America Research & Policy Center is a nationwide network of 29 state environmental groups with members and supporters in every state. We work to protect our wildlife and wild places and promote core environmental values: clean air to breathe, clean water to drink, and clean energy to power our lives.

We write today in response to the recent Right Whale Speed Rule Assessment. Please find attached the signatures of 2954 individuals who added their names in support of the following message:

Dear NOAA Fisheries,

Our critically endangered North Atlantic right whales have earned a place in our culture -- named the state marine mammal for both Massachusetts and Georgia -- and our hearts, seen through our celebrations of the 16 baby right whales this winter. Today, we urge you to use the information in your report on the Right Whale Vessel Speed Rule to write strong protections for the species. Updated policy should:

- Create more areas where boats must travel slowly: We urge you to expand the size of existing Seasonal Management Areas, and to require speed limits in Dynamic Seasonal Management Areas.
- Reduce risk of whale collision with boats smaller than 65 feet: These smaller boats are causing right whale deaths -- but measures to reduce risk of collision don't apply to them. Vessel speed rules should extend to boats smaller than 65 feet.

We care deeply about our right whales and hope that you use the report's findings to formulate strong policy that will keep our right whales safe.

On behalf of these 2954 individuals, we urge you to do everything you can to protect right whales from vessel strikes, starting with formulating a set of strong rules that addresses the shortcomings of the current rules, as found in the Assessment.

Sincerely,

Steve Blackledge

Re: Oceana's Comments on the North Atlantic Right Whale (Eubalaena glacialis)
Vessel Speed Rule Assessment (June 2020) by NOAA, National Marine Fisheries Service, Office of Protected Resources

Dear Dr. Caroline Good:

In January 2021, the National Marine Fisheries Service ("Fisheries Service") released for comment its North Atlantic Right Whale (Eubalaena glacialis) Vessel Speed Rule Assessment (dated June 2020).¹ Oceana hereby submits these comments on the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment.

Oceana is the largest international ocean conservation organization solely focused on protecting the world's oceans. More than 1.2 million Americans are Oceana members and supporters, including over 340,000 members and supporters on the U.S. Atlantic seaboard. Oceana has been engaged as a stakeholder in the management of U.S. fisheries and interactions with endangered species for more than 15 years. We have a particular interest in greatly reducing, if not eliminating, vessel strike-related death, injury, and harm to the critically endangered North Atlantic right whale ("NARW") and other protected species. Oceana's North Atlantic Right Whale Campaign aims to reduce vessel strikes by advocating for slower, safer vessel speeds. The faster a vessel moves, the more likely it is to strike and kill a NARW. While a vessel strike at any speed is potentially deadly to a NARW, as vessel speeds decline, so do the odds of serious injury or death.²

For this reason, Oceana appreciates the opportunity to comment on the National Marine Fisheries Service's ("Fisheries Service") NARW Vessel Speed Rule Assessment with the goal of urging the Fisheries Service to improve upon this analysis to inform future rulemaking, and to request that the Fisheries Service take immediate action to enhance existing regulations to better protect NARWs from vessel strikes. Oceana agrees with many of the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment's overarching conclusions, and supports a number of its recommendations. However, as noted below, certain aspects of the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment have room for improvement. Moreover, Oceana urges the Fisheries Service to go beyond the recommendations contained in the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment, to immediately take the actions described herein.

Comments on Vessel Speed Rule Assessment High-Level Conclusions:

Oceana generally concurs with the following high-level observations in the report:

- “[R]educing vessel speed and separating whales and vessels via routing measures, continue to offer the most effective options available to reduce vessel collisions with right whales in U.S. waters.”³
- Reducing vessel speeds remains a critical component in reducing risk of ship strike and resulting mortality and serious injury.⁴
- “This review demonstrates that continued speed restrictions are warranted in light of the positive effect the speed rule has had in reducing the number of serious injuries and mortalities of right whales.”⁵
- The Vessel Speed Rule has been effective in reducing NARW mortalities, but should be strengthened by the Fisheries Service to further protect whales.⁶

² Final Rule To Remove the Sunset Provision of the Final Rule Implementing Vessel Speed Restrictions To Reduce the Threat of Ship Collisions With North Atlantic Right Whales, 78 Fed. Reg. 73,726, 73,728 (Dec. 9, 2013) [hereinafter “2013 Vessel Speed Rule”]. However, it is important to note that “there is no reasonable transiting speed at which large vessels could strike a whale without a large risk of lethally injuring the animal” Kelley Dan E, P Vlasic James, Brilliant Sean, Assessing the lethality of ship strikes on whales using simple biophysical models, Mar Mam Sci. 2020; 1–17 (2020), doi: 0.1111/mms.12745, <https://onlinelibrary.wiley.com/doi/full/10.1111/mms.12745>.

- The rate of mortalities, serious injury, and injury due to vessel strikes is still concerning, and additional study and measures are needed to further reduce the risk of vessel strike.⁷
- Given the gravity of the NARWs' health and population status and the continuing level of vessel collisions, the rule should be strengthened, and the recent calf deaths underscore the urgent need for effective enhancements to the Vessel Speed Rule.⁸

Comments on Recommendations in Vessel Speed Rule Assessment:

In addition, Oceana agrees with a number of the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment's recommendations regarding how to strengthen protections for NARWs, including:

- Oceana concurs with the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment's recommendation that "NMFS should investigate the locations and timing of SMAs relative to current right whale distribution and vessel traffic patterns. Given what we know about changes in whale distribution, and vessel traffic patterns since development of the 2008 rule, we need to modify the location, timing, or duration of one or more SMAs to maximize their effectiveness."⁹
- Oceana concurs with the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment's recommendation that the area south of Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket be considered for designation as an SMA.¹⁰ Significant data back up the appropriateness of this designation, and the Fisheries Service should move to do so immediately.
- Oceana agrees with the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment's statement that the waters near Cape Cod is an area of particular concern, and that the Fisheries Service should quickly evaluate whether additional management actions and vessel restrictions are required to protect NARWs.
- The Vessel Speed Rule Assessment recommends that the Fisheries Service either "modify or terminate the DMA program." Oceana opposes termination of the DMA program, because it serves as a valuable complement to the SMA program. Oceana agrees, however, that the DMA program should be modified by making compliance with the 10-knot speed limit within a DMA mandatory.
- Oceana concurs with the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment's recommendation that the Fisheries Service "address vessel strike risk from small vessels,"¹¹ as well as its statement that "[t]he number of documented and reported small vessel collisions with whales necessitates further action both as it relates to potential regulations and outreach to this sector of the mariner community.”¹² Oceana urges the Fisheries Service to, at a minimum, extend the speed limit requirement to ships in the 40 foot to 65 foot range.

- Oceana agrees with the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment's conclusion that the “investigation of navigational safety revealed no indication of impacts from implementation of the speed rule.”¹³
- Oceana agrees with the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment's recommendation to enhance enforcement and outreach to ensure greater compliance with the rule.¹⁴ The Fisheries Service should immediately announce NARW protection as an enforcement priority, scrutinize exemption claims, pursue more notices of violation, and seek higher penalties.

Comments on Improvements to Analysis in Vessel Speed Rule Assessment to Support Future Rulemaking:

Certain aspects of the Fisheries Service's analysis should be bolstered to inform any future rulemaking to strengthen the Vessel Speed Rule. In order to correct the inadequacies of the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment for use in future rulemaking, Oceana urges the Fisheries Service to take the following actions:

- Measure compliance with the Vessel Speed Rule and cooperation with DMAs using AIS data sent from vessels to satellite receivers in addition to terrestrial receivers.
- Measure compliance with the Vessel Speed Rule and cooperation with DMAs using all available AIS data from all vessels that threaten NARWs with collisions, including vessels less than 65 feet in length or vessels voluntarily carrying and operating AIS equipment.
- Measure compliance with the Vessel Speed Rule using a criterion that counts speeding into an SMA – and only after that point slowing down – as non-compliance, rather than as compliance. Apply a similar approach to measuring cooperation with DMAs.
- Enhance agency's descriptions of the methods underpinning their analyses in order to allow outside stakeholders, scientists, and citizens to repeat the analyses.
- Publicly post the code underpinning the agency's analyses on Code.gov or a similar website in order to allow outside stakeholders, scientists, and citizens to repeat the analyses, and in the interests of transparency.

- Develop and use best scientific and commercially available data in choosing among species management alternatives in future rulemaking, as contemplated by the Endangered Species Act, Marine Mammal Protection Act, and other statutes requiring species management and regulation via rigorous analysis of data.

Call for Immediate Action:

In light of the crisis faced by NARWs, Oceana also urges the Fisheries Service to immediately initiate a rulemaking to strengthen the Vessel Speed Rule. Time is of the essence. Accordingly, Oceana urges the Fisheries Service to promulgate interim/emergency regulations to immediately implement as many recommendations as possible, pending promulgation of final regulations. This includes making any voluntary actions (e.g., compliance with Dynamic Management Areas) mandatory, immediately establishing new interim Seasonal Management Areas demonstrated to be important to NARWs (e.g., south of Nantucket/Martha's Vineyard), extending the speed limit to at least vessels in the 40 foot to 65 foot range, and tailoring the blanket exemption from the Vessel Speed Rule for federal agencies. More specifically, Oceana's recommendations for bolstering the Vessel Speed Rule include the following:

- The Fisheries Service should expand the temporal and geographic scope of existing Seasonal Management Areas or "SMAs," and create new SMAs in order to account for changing whale distribution patterns. To identify new SMAs, the Fisheries Service should establish a formal process by which areas repeatedly designated as Dynamic Management Areas or "DMAs" become candidates for new SMAs. One such area that should be designated immediately is the area to the south of Nantucket/Martha's Vineyard. Moreover, existing SMAs should be evaluated to identify whether their duration and geographic scope is sufficient to protect whales, especially given the availability of acoustic monitoring data indicating that whales are using certain areas for large parts of the year, or even year-round.
- The Fisheries Service should make voluntary speed limits in DMAs mandatory. DMAs are an important complement to SMAs, because they allow the agency to impose some level of protection in response to actual, real-time observations of NARWs—even when they appear in places where they have not historically frequented. Given that even the loss of one whale can impede the recovery of the species,¹⁵ DMAs remain important and should be made mandatory.
- The Fisheries Service should require, at a minimum, that vessels in the 40 foot to 65 foot range comply with the 10-knot speed limit, especially given studies indicating that smaller vessels also pose a lethal threat to NARWs,¹⁶ and the recent lethal strikes to young calves, including a calf that was killed in February 2021 by a 54-foot vessel traveling at 21 knots.

- The Fisheries Service should narrow and tailor the current blanket exemption for all federal vessels—regardless of agency, type of vessel, or vessel activity.¹⁷ While federal vessels should continue to be exempt when engaging in true emergency, safety, or national security missions, they should be required to adhere to the speed limit when engaging in day-to-day transits and non-time-critical activities—especially given that NARW habitat is heavily transited by federal fleets.¹⁸ Indeed, the Fisheries Service has noted that its ship strike database contains a disproportionately high number of strikes attributable to the USCG and the Navy, although this may be in part due to a higher incidence of reporting.¹⁹
- The Fisheries Service establish a requirement to issue an annual report evaluating potential opportunities to further enhance the Vessel Speed Rule. Given the rapidly deteriorating circumstances faced by NARWs, periodic reports on a set schedule are necessary to ensure the rule remains adequately protective.

In addition to improvements to the Vessel Speed Rule, Oceana also provides a number of additional complementary recommendations to further protect NARWs from vessel strike. These measures should be implemented as quickly as possible given the current decline of the NARW population and the escalating Unusual Mortality Event. These recommendations include:

- Invest in monitoring efforts and studies to understand changing NARW patterns for use in developing mechanisms to prevent vessel strike;
- Evaluate new and existing ship routing measures to enhance NARW protections;
- Expand AIS requirements to vessels at least in the 40 foot to 65 foot range, both to improve navigational safety, and to allow for compliance monitoring and enforcement of vessel speed restrictions;
- Enhance compliance monitoring and enforcement efforts associated with the Vessel Speed Rule;
- Revise and expand NARW critical habitat to further protect the species from human-caused threats, including vessel strikes;

- Cooperate with Canada to prevent vessel strike.

This comment letter first provides an overview of the crisis faced by the NARW and the significant legal authority afforded to the Fisheries Service and the United States Coast Guard (“USCG”) to protect NARWs from vessel strikes. It then discusses the factual background surrounding the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment. It then provides a number of comments and recommendations regarding the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment’s recommendations and conclusions, as well as data and information contained in the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment. Finally, these comments provide Oceana’s request for immediate action on behalf of the Fisheries Service and the USCG to implement the recommendations described herein.

I. BACKGROUND

A. The Existential Threat Facing North Atlantic Right Whales

The NARW is one of the most critically endangered marine mammals in the world. Starting in 2010, the tenuous recovery of NARW reversed and the NARW population has declined at an alarming rate.²⁰ In October 2020, the Fisheries Service estimated that around 360 whales remain alive, down from the prior year estimate of around 400 whales in January 2018.²¹ Additionally, NARWs are experiencing an Unusual Mortality Event (“UME”)—an unexpected stranding event that involves a significant die-off of a marine mammal population and demands immediate response.²² Overall, the preliminary cumulative total number of NARWs involved in the ongoing Unusual Mortality Event from 2017-2021 has been updated to 49 individuals, 34 whales found dead and 15 whales seriously injured, which represents more than 10% of the current population.²³ NARW reproductive rates are low, and only approximately 85

The 2019 North Atlantic Right Whale Consortium’s annual report card estimated that only 409 individuals remained at the end of 2018, and found that one type of estimate, the “minimum number alive” method, placed the population as low as 327 in 2018. reproductively active female whales remain.²⁴ Unless current trends are swiftly reversed, remaining females could drop to precipitous levels leading to the functional extinction of the species.²⁵ At numbers this low, even the loss of one whale can impede the recovery of the species.²⁶ Immediate action is urgently needed to halt the UME and prevent further loss of life.²⁷

Human-caused vessel strikes and fishing entanglement are the main culprits of the NARW's decline. In fact, one study found that 88% of NARW deaths between 2003 and 2018 in which cause of death was determined were due to anthropogenic trauma; 58% from entanglement, and 42% from ship strikes.²⁸ Possible exacerbating causes include prey and ecosystem shifts as a result of climate change and related changes in whale behavior.²⁹

The anthropogenic threats to NARWs are binational in character, as NARWs primarily inhabit temperate coastal waters of the Atlantic Ocean from eastern Canada down the United States east coast to Florida.³⁰ Entangling fishing gear is ubiquitous in the NARW habitat in the northeast U.S. waters.³¹ Fishing gear lines have been seen wrapped around every part of NARWs' bodies, cutting into their flesh and causing life-threatening infections, and are so strong that they can sever fins and tails and cut into bone.³² Vessel strikes cause similarly severe trauma, and disproportionately affect NARW mothers, calves, and juveniles.³³ In 2020, one calf was presumed dead after being observed off the coast of Georgia with severe head and mouth injuries from a probable vessel strike, while another was found dead off the New Jersey coast bearing evidence of two separate vessel strikes.³⁴ Yet again in February 2021, another calf was found dead off the coast of St. Augustine, Florida with severe propeller wounds and fractured ribs and skull, while at the same time his mother was observed with serious injuries indicative of vessel strike.³⁵ Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission investigators determined that the whales had been struck by a 54-foot recreational fishing boat that had been traveling at 21 knots.³⁶ The deaths of these calves are devastating to a critically endangered population already experiencing a low calving rate.

B. Legal Authority to Protect NARW from Vessel Strikes

The federal government has ample authority and the legal obligation to protect NARWs under a number of legal regimes, including the Endangered Species Act (“ESA”), the Marine Mammal Protection Act (“MMPA”), and the Coast Guard Authorization Act of 2018, among others. The authority and responsibility to prevent NARWs from vessel strikes primarily rests with the Fisheries Service, which is legally responsible for stewardship of the nation’s marine resources, and the USCG, which is the branch of the U.S. military responsible for maritime law enforcement and shipping regulations. In the past, these two federal agencies have worked collaboratively to implement measures to reduce the temporal and spatial overlap between whales and shipping activity. Other federal agencies that authorize and engage in projects in the Atlantic Ocean also have a responsibility to mitigate and prevent injury and death of NARWs resulting from those projects, and often must do so in consultation with the Fisheries Service.

1. National Marine Fisheries Service

The Fisheries Service is the lead agency that implements the ESA and the MMPA for whales, including NARWs,³⁷ and thus is one of the primary agencies responsible for protecting NARWs. NARWs have been listed as an “endangered species” since 1970 under a prior version of the modern ESA, the Endangered Species Conservation Act of 1969.³⁸

The Secretary of Commerce has delegated responsibility for protecting whales under the ESA and MMPA to the Fisheries Service.

³⁸ 50 C.F.R. § 224.101; see also Conservation of Endangered Species and Other Fish or Wildlife, 35 Fed. Reg. 8,491, 8,498 (June 2, 1970); Endangered And Threatened Species; Proposed Endangered Status for North Atlantic Right Whales, 71 Fed. Reg. 77,704, 77,706 (Dec. 27, 2006) (“Since 1974, NMFS has maintained the right whale listing as originally listed by the United States Fish and Wildlife Service (USFWS) under the Endangered Species Conservation Act of 1969, the precursor to the Endangered Species Act of 1973 . . . -- Eubalaena spp., i.e., all the species within the genus Eubalaena.”).

NARWs are also protected by the MMPA, which was passed to prevent marine mammals from diminishing beyond the point at which they cease to be a significant functioning element in their ecosystem and from falling below their optimum sustainable population.³⁹ In calculating the optimum sustainable population, the Fisheries Service is required to determine the “potential biological removal level,” or “the maximum number of animals, not including natural mortalities, which may be removed from a marine mammal stock while still allowing that stock to reach or maintain its optimum sustainable population.”⁴⁰ The potential biological removal (“PBR”) level for NARWs is 0.8—less than one animal per year.⁴¹

NARWs are deemed to be a “strategic stock” under the MMPA because the level of direct human-caused mortality exceeds the PBR level, and because NARWs are an endangered species.⁴² The Fisheries Service has additional authorities to alleviate impacts on strategic stocks. If the Fisheries Service determines, based on a stock assessment or other significant new information, that “impacts on rookeries, mating grounds, or other areas of similar ecological significance to marine mammals may be causing the decline or impeding the recovery of a strategic stock, the Secretary [of Commerce] may develop and implement conservation or management measures to alleviate those impacts.”⁴³ In addition to being “strategic stocks,” NARWs are considered to be “depleted” under the MMPA, which also provides certain additional protections.⁴⁴ The ESA and the MMPA both prohibit unauthorized “take” of NARWs.⁴⁵

Under the ESA and the MMPA, the Fisheries Service has rulemaking authority to strengthen the Vessel Speed Rule to protect NARWs from vessel strike. Section 11 of the ESA gives the Fisheries Service—as well as the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Department in which the USCG is operating—broad authority to promulgate any regulation “as may be appropriate” to enforce the ESA.⁴⁶ The Fisheries Service has similarly broad rulemaking

That is, under the MMPA, the population can sustain no deaths or serious injuries due to human causes if its recovery is to be assured.”). authority under the MMPA. The Fisheries Service has broad power to effectuate its mandate under the MMPA, and “shall prescribe such regulations as are necessary and appropriate to carry out the purposes of [the MMPA].”⁴⁷

Pursuant to these rulemaking authorities, the Fisheries Service has promulgated regulations designed to prevent ship strikes to NARWs including (i) a 1997 prohibition on approaches to NARWs, requiring vessels to maintain a 500-yard buffer distance from whales;⁴⁸ and (ii) the 2008 Vessel Speed Rule implementing speed limits as well as the Vessel Speed Rule that is the subject of the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment, which requires vessels greater than or equal to 65 feet in length to follow mandatory 10-knot speed limits during times and places frequented by NARWs (referred to as “Seasonal Management Areas” or “SMAs”).⁴⁹ SMAs have been established off the coast of the Southeast, Mid-Atlantic, and Northeast United States.

Pursuant to these authorities, the Fisheries Service has ample authority to enhance the Vessel Ship Speed Rule and to implement the recommendations for strengthening the rule as described herein.

2. United States Coast Guard

The USCG also has significant authority to protect NARWs, as it is responsible under the 2018 Coast Guard Authorization Act for establishing vessel routing measures.⁵⁰ The USCG, in coordination with the Fisheries Service, has implemented routing measures, including traffic separation schemes (“TSS”), areas to be avoided (“ATBA”), and recommended routes, to reduce vessel traffic through areas of high NARW density. The USCG also manages two mandatory ship reporting systems (WHALESNORTH and WHALESSOUTH) under which vessels entering core whale habitat must report to the USCG; in return, they receive information regarding recent whale sightings.⁵¹ Moreover, the USCG is charged with enforcing the ESA and MMPA, provides patrols for enforcement, and supports the Fisheries Service’s monitoring efforts.⁵²

Under the Coast Guard Authorization Act, the USCG is authorized to “construct, operate, maintain, improve, or expand vessel traffic services that consist of measures for controlling or supervising vessel traffic or for protecting navigation and the marine environment and that may include one or more of reporting and operating requirements, surveillance and communications systems, routing systems, and fairways.”⁵³ This broad authority to implement “vessel traffic services” extends to “any port or place under the jurisdiction of the United States, in the navigable waters of the United States, or in any area covered by an international agreement negotiated” under the act.⁵⁴ Among other things, the Act provides the USCG with authority to “control vessel traffic” in areas with vessel congestion or hazardous circumstances by:

- Specifying times of entry, movement, or departure,
- Establishing vessel traffic routing schemes,
- Establishing vessel size, speed, or draft limitations and vessel operating conditions, and
- Restricting operation, in any hazardous area or under hazardous conditions, to vessels that have particular operating characteristics or capabilities considered necessary for safe operation under the circumstances.⁵⁵

In carrying out these vessel traffic service responsibilities, the USCG is required to take into account “all relevant factors” concerning navigation and safety, as well as “protection of the marine environment” and “environmental factors,” among other things.⁵⁶ The USCG is thus expressly directed to consider protecting the marine environment when it promulgates measures to control vessel traffic, and such measures include a broad range of options.

The USCG is also required to “designate necessary fairways and traffic separation schemes for vessels operating in the territorial sea of the United States and in high seas approaches, outside the territorial sea, to such ports or places” in order to provide safe access routes for the movement of vessel traffic proceeding to or from ports or places subject to U.S. jurisdiction.⁵⁷ A fairway is a sea lane where artificial structures are not permitted.⁵⁸ A traffic separation scheme (“TSS”) is “a designated routing measure which is aimed at the separation of opposing streams of traffic by appropriate means and by the establishment of traffic lanes.”⁵⁹ A TSS separates traffic by having vessels travel in a lane in a particular direction, with lanes separated by a separation zone or line.⁶⁰

Prior to making a TSS or fairway designation, the USCG must undertake a Port Access Route Study (“PARS”), which evaluates traffic density and the need for safe access routes for vessels in areas for which fairways or TSS are proposed.⁶¹ Once again, the USCG must consider a variety of factors in carrying out such responsibilities, including “protection of the marine environment” and “environmental factors.”⁶² The USCG must also consult with other federal agencies, including the Secretary of Commerce, to take into account all other uses of the area under consideration (including establishment of marine or estuarine sanctuaries), and must reconcile the need for safe access routes with all other reasonable uses to the extent practicable.⁶³ The statute also directs the USCG to issue rules and regulations regarding the use of fairways and TSS, and authorizes the USCG to make their use mandatory for specific types and sizes of vessels if deemed reasonable and necessary.⁶⁴

In connection with such designations, the USCG is also directed to notify cognizant international organizations of any designation and seek the cooperation of foreign States in making it mandatory for vessels under their control to use the fairway or TSS to the same extent required for United States vessels.⁶⁵ The USCG is further directed to transmit vessel-traffic related regulations, via the Secretary of State, to appropriate international bodies for consideration as international standards.⁶⁶ In practice, this means that the USCG submits proposed routing measures, such as TSS, to the International Maritime Organization (“IMO”) for approval, adoption, and implementation.⁶⁷

C. Background on the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment

1. History of the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment

The Vessel Speed Rule was originally promulgated by the Fisheries Service in 2008.⁶⁸ The Vessel Speed Rule establishes a mandatory 10-knot speed limit for vessels more than 65 feet in length during times and areas frequented by the NARWs, referred to as “Seasonal Management Areas” or “SMAs.”⁶⁹ At the same time, the Fisheries Service also created a program whereby it requested cooperation with a voluntary 10-knot speed limit in temporarily designated areas where three or more whales have been observed, referred to as “Dynamic Management Areas” or “DMAs.” Federally-owned vessels were exempted from the rule. The Vessel Speed Rule originally had a sunset provision.

⁶⁸ The Fisheries Service ultimately retained most measures the proposed rule set forth. But it made the following modifications in favor of industry considerations: (1) voluntary – not mandatory – speed restrictions within DMAs, (2) exceptions to speed restrictions in cases of severe oceanographic, meteorological, or hydrographic conditions to maintain navigational safety, (3) reduction in the size and boundaries of SMAs in the Mid-Atlantic to minimize economic impact to vessel operators, and (4) expiration of the rule in December 2013 to allow for analysis of its efficacy, a provision which was ultimately eliminated. 2013 Vessel Speed Rule, 78 Fed. ⁶⁹ 50 C.F.R. §224.105; 2008 Vessel Speed Rule, 73 Fed. Reg. at 60,173.

In 2013, the Fisheries Service amended the Vessel Speed Rule to remove the sunset provision, and to require the Fisheries Service to issue a report evaluating the effectiveness of the Rule.⁷⁰ No later than January 1, 2019, the Fisheries Service was required “publish and seek comment on a report evaluating the conservation value and economic and navigational safety impacts of [the rule], including any recommendations to minimize burden of such impacts.”⁷¹ This requirement culminated in the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment. However, the Fisheries Service did not complete the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment until June 2020, and did not publish and seek comment on the assessment until January 2021.

During the rulemaking process for the 2013 Vessel Speed Rule, the Fisheries Service received a number of comments on how to improve the rule to provide greater protections to NARWs. However, while the Fisheries Service stated its intent to evaluate these comments, to “periodically evaluate the efficacy of vessel speed restrictions to ensure they are attaining their intended objectives,” and to potentially initiate a new rulemaking. The Fisheries Service has not yet done so.

2. Summary of Vehicle Speed Rule Assessment Data Source, Methods, and Results

The primary purpose of the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment was to “review of the speed rule to evaluate how effective it is at reducing the incidence of right whale mortality and serious injury due to vessel strikes and where it could be improved.”⁷² Below, Oceana briefly summarizes the main features of this analysis.

a. Vessel Speed Rule Assessment Data Sources

The Vessel Speed Rule Assessment relies on data drawn from vessels’ automatic identification system (“AIS”), a GPS-like device that is required on commercial vessels greater than 65 feet in length in order to avoid collisions.⁷³ AIS works by transmitting vessel data both between vessels via on-board transponders and to costal authorities via terrestrial and satellite receivers. Thus, AIS and the information it provides about vessel speeds is crucial to understanding vessel strike threats to NARWs, and more generally, enhancing safety at sea and enabling monitoring and transparency. Here, the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment used “AIS data from shore-based receivers” alone.⁷⁴

b. Vessel Speed Rule Assessment Methods

In the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment, the Fisheries Service reported compliance with the Speed Rule within SMAs using distance-weighted average speed. This method totals the distance a vessel travels and notes the speed during each segment of its transit. Each segment’s speed is then multiplied by the fraction of the total distance traveled and summed to produce an average speed weighted by each segment’s contribution.⁷⁵

c. Vessel Speed Rule Assessment Results

i. Summary of Results

The Vessel Speed Rule Assessment’s main finding was clear – mandatory slower speeds work, but more needs to be done to meet the needs of NARWs and the dictates of the law. As the Fisheries Service notes, “the number of documented vessel strike mortalities and serious injuries decreased from 12 during the 10 years prior to the rule’s implementation to 8 in the 10 years since implementation.”⁷⁶ While this decrease in the number of mortalities is an improvement over previous years, the NARW PBR of <1 per year demands further reductions. And while vessel traffic “in active SMAs revealed a reduction in vessel speeds over time, even during periods when SMAs were inactive,”⁷⁷ the Fisheries Service noted that it “lack[s] sufficient data” to demonstrate causality between the Vessel Speed Rule and the declined in documented mortalities.⁷⁸ Meanwhile, “the voluntary Dynamic Management Area (DMA) program found limited mariner cooperation that fell well short of levels reached in mandatory SMAs.”⁷⁹ Significantly, “an economic impact assessment” found manageable costs to regulated industries, mostly to the container ship sector.⁸⁰ Overall, the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment stressed that “[m]ariner compliance with the vessel speed rule is critical to [its] effectiveness.”⁸¹ Oceana notes that given the critically endangered nature of the NARW population, compliance approaching 100% is necessary.

ii. SMA Analysis Results

The Fisheries Service found varying levels of compliance with SMAs. The Vessel Speed Rule Assessment reported that “the proportion of total vessel transit distance through active SMAs at speeds < 10 knots reached an all-time high (81%) in 2018-2019.”⁸² However, “compliance has generally leveled off over the past few years (~79-81%) and a significant amount of vessel traffic (nearly 200,000 nm) continues to transit active SMAs at speeds in excess of 10 knots.”⁸³ The Fisheries Service found that compliance varied by time, place, and vessel type.

In terms of time, for those vessels subject to the rule, the distance-weighted average speed in active SMAs fell from about 10 knots during the 2008-2009 season to 8.52 knots during the 2018-2019 season. In terms of time, the level of mariner compliance peaked at 81% during 2018-2019.⁸⁴ In terms of geographic variation, the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment found higher compliance “in the four most northern SMAs,” while on the other hand, “particularly excessive vessel speeds (> 12 knots)” in the “North Carolina to Georgia SMA.”⁸⁵ Cape Cod Bay, Race Point, and Great South Channel SMAs had compliance rates greater than 80% overall years, while the North Carolina to Georgia SMA had the lowest compliance rate at about 63%.

Compliance varied among types of vessels as well. In active SMAs, fishing vessels, container ships, and towing or pushing vessels accounted for most of the vessel traffic in all SMAs during 2018-2019. “Vessel compliance varied considerably by vessel type in active SMAs during 2018-2019,” the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment finds. Specifically, “[f]ishing vessels showed the highest level of compliant transit (93%) while other cargo (44%) and pleasure vessels (31%) had particularly low levels of compliance.”

On vessels under 65 feet in length, the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment found that “[t]he best available AIS data indicate that a substantial amount of small vessel traffic traveling at speeds in excess of 10 knots is present in active SMAs particularly in the Mid-Atlantic and to a lesser degree in the southeast.”⁸⁶

Meanwhile, while vessel speeds declined, the Fisheries Service also found that the total distance transited by mid-sized vessels (those over 65 and mostly less than 350 feet long)⁸⁷ across all SMAs may have jumped. The total distance transited by mid-sized vessels in active SMAs increased from 131,354 nm in 2008-2009 to 584,424 nm in 2018-2019. “This increase in transit distance is partly an artifact of available AIS data and changes to AIS carriage requirements since the rule came into effect in 2008,” the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment concludes.⁸⁸

iii. DMA Analysis Results

The Vessel Speed Rule Assessment also studied voluntary DMAs. Compliance was generally low. The report “examined vessel operations in 86 DMAs established between January 2010 and May 2019” in waters “off New England and the Mid-Atlantic and off the coasts of Georgia and Florida,” where NARWs live.⁸⁹ “The [median] proportion of vessel traffic cooperating with the 10-knot speed request” in active voluntary DMAs “increased from 35.55% to 50.62%,” a rate the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment characterizes as “modest” and which “fails to approach levels achieved in mandatory SMAs. Only a small portion of vessels are modifying their speed to less than 10 knots within active DMAs.”⁹⁰ All in all, the report finds, “[v]essels continue to transit thousands of nautical miles at speeds above 10 knots through active DMAs, where right whales are known to have aggregated.”⁹¹

The Vessel Speed Rule Assessment found great differences in DMA compliance by type of vessel. “The majority of AIS-equipped small vessel traffic in active SMAs came from four vessel types; pleasure, sailing, pilot and fishing vessels,” according to the data.⁹² “Of these, sailing and fishing vessels traveled at lower speeds with nearly 100% of sailing vessel traffic traveling at speeds of under 10 knots,” whereas “more than 50% of pleasure vessel transit distance exceeded 10 knots and that number rose to more than 85% for pilot vessels.”⁹³ Thus, the Fisheries Service finds, “[g]iven the ubiquity of small pleasure and pilot vessel traffic in some SMAs and the high speeds at which many travel, these vessel types may pose a particular threat to right whales.”⁹⁴

II. DISCUSSION

A. Comments on High-Level Conclusions in Vessel Speed Rule Assessment

Oceana agrees with a number of the Fisheries Services’ overall conclusions, as articulated in the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment. For instance, Oceana agrees with the Assessment’s overall conclusions that:

- “[R]educing vessel speed and separating whales and vessels via routing measures, continue to offer the most effective options available to reduce vessel collisions with right whales in U.S. waters.”⁹⁵
- Reducing vessel speeds remains a critical component in reducing risk of ship strike and resulting mortality and serious injury.⁹⁶

- “This review demonstrates that continued speed restrictions are warranted in light of the positive effect the speed rule has had in reducing the number of serious injuries and mortalities of right whales.”⁹⁷
- The Vessel Speed Rule has been effective in reducing NARW mortalities, but should be further strengthened by the Fisheries Service to further protect whales.⁹⁸
- The rate of mortalities, serious injury, and injury due to vessel strikes is still concerning, and additional study and measures are needed to further reduce the risk of vessel strike.⁹⁹
- Given the gravity of the whales’ health and population status and the continuing level of vessel collisions, the rule should be strengthened, and the recent calf deaths underscore the urgent need for effective enhancements to the speed rule.¹⁰⁰

B. Comments on Recommendations in Vessel Speed Rule Assessment

In addition to concurring with these high-level conclusions, Oceana also concurs with a number of the recommendations in the report regarding the need for enhancements in both the Vessel Speed Rule and in the overall management regime designed to protect NARWs. Oceana urges the Fisheries Service to swiftly act on these recommendations. Below, Oceana also provides its own additional comments on ways to further strengthen the recommendations outlined in the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment.

1. Evaluation and Recommendations Regarding SMAs

The Vessel Speed Rule Assessment makes several recommendations regarding the SMA program.

Oceana's Comments on the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment

Page 19 of 42

First, the Assessment recommends that “NMFS should investigate the locations and timing of SMAs relative to current right whale distribution and vessel traffic patterns. Given what we know about changes in whale distribution, and vessel traffic patterns since development of the 2008 rule, we need to modify the location, timing, or duration of one or more SMAs to maximize their effectiveness.”¹⁰¹

Oceana concurs that the Fisheries Service needs to closely monitor and assess NARW distribution patterns and consider a range of alternatives to expand existing SMAs or create new SMAs accordingly. The Fisheries Service has recognized, in the last several years, there have been observed shifts in NARW distributions, habitat use, and behaviors due to changing ecosystems and warming waters, particularly in the Gulf of Maine.¹⁰² It is thus vital that the Fisheries Service continue to evaluate and adapt management of existing SMAs to ensure they are continuing to provide sufficient coverage for NARWs, and to establish new or expanded SMAs as necessary.¹⁰³ Research indicates that SMAs reduced the number of whale deaths due to ship strikes and supports expanding SMAs to cover additional areas in the NARW migratory corridor.¹⁰⁴ Because SMAs are effective only to the extent they overlap with NARWs in space and time, such efforts are critical.¹⁰⁵ Such efforts will also ensure that decisions made about endangered species utilize the best scientific and commercial data available.¹⁰⁶

Evaluating the efficacy of current SMAs is all the more important because they were intentionally drawn by the Fisheries Service to be tightly constricted to the NARW use patterns that existed prior to 2008. Although the Fisheries Service acknowledged that “creating larger SMAs than those being enacted would provide greater protection for right whales,”¹⁰⁷ the Fisheries Service underscored that “[t]he timing, duration, and geographic extent of the speed restrictions were tightly constricted to reflect right whale movement, distribution, and aggregation patterns to minimize potential impacts to ship operations.”¹⁰⁸ Existing SMAs are thus tightly constrained to the areas NARWs were known to frequent pre-2008 and were not designed with a buffer to account for shifts in NARW behavior. Given that significant changes in NARW patterns have been observed since the SMAs were established, expanding the existing SMAs is necessary.

b. Establishing an SMA South of Martha’s Vineyard and Nantucket

In addition, the Assessment also recommends that the area south of Martha’s Vineyard and Nantucket be considered for designation as an SMA.¹⁰⁹ The Assessment further explains that “[d]uring the past 10 years, at least 25% of DMAs were declared in the region south of Martha’s Vineyard and Nantucket, Massachusetts. Right whale foraging activity has steadily increased in this area throughout the years.”¹¹⁰

Oceana concurs in this assessment and agrees that an SMA should be designated in this area as soon as possible. Over the last decade, the Fisheries Service has undoubtedly gathered significant additional NARW sighting information, including a record of all of the locations in which it has established DMAs since 2008.¹¹¹ The Fisheries Service thus has significant information regarding whale sightings in this area. Indeed, in addition to being an area where a high number of DMAs has been established, it is worth noting that for many of these DMAs there were a large number of whales present in the DMA. For instance, in 2019, the Fisheries Service established twenty-nine DMAs, eighteen of which were south of Nantucket.¹¹² As another example, the Fisheries Service established a DMA south of Nantucket until February 15, 2020, after 50 NARWs—one-eighth of the total population—were spotted there on January 31, 2020.¹¹³ In addition, a 2017 comprehensive study that surveyed whale locations using passive acoustic monitoring showed a heavy NARW presence in the area south of Nantucket for most of the year.¹¹⁴ In a 2020 technical memorandum, the Fisheries Service itself acknowledge the importance of these areas to NARWs, identifying them as a “[w]ell documented NARW foraging habitats” and “[k]nown primary North Atlantic right whale habitats.”¹¹⁵

Establishing a mandatory SMA near Nantucket, rather than activating repeated voluntary DMAs is thus critical to protecting NARWs passing through this area.

c. Evaluate and Enhance Management Actions Near Cape Cod

Third, the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment explains that “[t]hree significant vessel collisions have occurred in the area around Cape Cod, Massachusetts, including at least one mortality inside an active SMA.”¹¹⁶ Accordingly, the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment recommends that “[t]his is an area of particular concern and requires a re-assessment of management actions required to reduce the risk of vessel strikes there.”¹¹⁷

Oceana agrees that the waters near Cape Cod is an area of particular concern, and that the Fisheries Service should quickly evaluate whether additional management actions and vessel restrictions are required. Large numbers of whales have recently been observed in various areas around Massachusetts, particularly near Cape Cod Bay. NARWs seem to be increasingly congregating in Cape Cod Bay,¹¹⁸ with more than two hundred whales spotted in the bay in April 2017, including several calves,¹¹⁹ and similarly high numbers spotted in 2018, representing over half of the population.¹²⁰ Vessel strikes have also been implicated in two mortalities in and around Cape Cod Bay since 2016.¹²¹

Given the importance of this area, and the fact it presents a high risk of potential ship strikes, the Fisheries Service should analyze this SMA to ensure it is remaining adequately protective. Potential ways to make the SMA more protective include expanding the temporal scope of the SMA and applying speed restrictions in the SMA to smaller vessels. For instance, in December 2018, observers spotted a group of whales entering Cape Cod Bay in the first part of December, confirming that whales are entering the bay earlier than previously thought. Yet the Cape Cod Bay SMA does not start until January 1, and the Off Race Point SMA (which whales likely pass through to get to Cape Cod Bay) does not start until March 1. A longer SMA timeframe for these and other SMAs should be closely evaluated in light of new data and changing behaviors, in order to ensure SMAs are adequately protective. Passive acoustic monitoring data can be utilized to corroborate visual observations to better understand where and when whales are located.

The area should also be evaluated in the context of vessel routing measures with the USCG to ensure that overlap between whales and vessels can be minimized.

d. Compliance and Enforcement

In addition to making recommendations regarding SMAs, the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment also evaluates the level of mariner compliance with the speed limit. The Assessment found higher levels of compliance overall—81% in 2018-2019—but found areas for improvement in terms of specific types of vessels and specific SMAs, “identifying certain discrete areas of poor compliance stand out and require enhanced attention.”¹²² For instance, “[i]n most Seasonal Management Areas (SMAs) more than 85% of vessels subject to the rule maintained speeds under 10 knots, but in some portions of SMAs mariner compliance is low, with rates below 25% for the largest commercial vessels outside four ports in the southeast.”¹²³

As observed in the Assessment report, the areas and types of vessels currently exhibiting low levels of compliance should be targeted for enhanced outreach and enforcement in order to promote higher levels of compliance in the future. Oceana agrees that the relative difference in compliance between regions may suggest a need for targeted action but disagrees in the classification of 81% compliance as “high” as this level still suggests hundreds of vessels traveling at illegal speeds, adding risk to the NARWs in the region. The agency must include an assessment of risk associated with varying levels of compliance and work to ensure compliance matches the conservation needs of the species.

2. Evaluation and Recommendations Regarding DMAs

The Assessment recommends that the Fisheries Service either “modify or terminate the DMA program,” concluding that “[m]ariner cooperation with voluntary speed recommendations in DMAs is generally low and as such, likely does not provide a substantive reduction in vessel strike risk.”¹²⁴ As such, the assessment underscores that “NMFS should evaluate the DMA program to identify modifications to achieve more meaningful protections for right whales.”¹²⁵

Oceana's Comments on the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment

Oceana concurs with the agency's conclusion that mariner compliance in DMAs needs to be strengthened. Indeed, the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment corroborates multiple other studies that have reached similar conclusions, including a recent analysis conducted by Oceana.

In March 2020, Oceana conducted its own analysis of terrestrial and satellite AIS data to assess voluntary cooperation within DMAs.¹²⁶ In contrast to the methodology used in the current Vessel Speed Rule Assessment, Oceana used a more stringent standard of non-cooperation: all vessels with least two AIS signals while in a restricted speed zone with at least one of the two AIS signals over 10 knots were deemed to be non-cooperative. From January 22, 2020 to March 6, 2020, Oceana evaluated voluntary compliance with a DMA established by the Fisheries Service to protect an aggregation of NARWs south of Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard—an area that has contained up to 60 NARWs in recent months.¹²⁷ The DMA was in effect until March 29, 2020.¹²⁸ Oceana's analysis found that more than 41% of the 446 ships in the area exceeded the voluntary speed limit of 10 knots. Moreover, of the 183 ships exceeding the voluntary speed limit in this DMA, Oceana's analysis found that:

- Most (92%) were large cargo and tanker ships, including one that was more than 1,100 feet long, going as fast as 18.4 knots.
- Nearly all (96%) were flagged to foreign countries such as Panama and Liberia.
- One ship reported a speed over 22 knots, more than twice the voluntary speed limit.¹²⁹

Conversely, Oceana found that 88.4% of the ships transiting through the mandatory SMA near Block Island, Rhode Island were complying with the speed restriction.¹³⁰ Various additional studies corroborate the analysis undertaken in the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment and the conclusion that cooperation with the DMA program lags the level of compliance with the mandatory SMA program.¹³¹

However, although DMAs have fallen short of their potential promise, the program should be strengthened rather than terminated. Given that even the loss of one whale can impede the recovery of the species,¹³² even some improvement in vessel speed reductions is better than none. Second, DMAs are important because they allow the agency to impose some level of protection nimbly and in response to actual, real-time observations of NARWs—even when they appear in places where they have not historically frequented. They thus serve a different function to SMAs, which are vital, and provide more permanent, lasting protections, but that are not as easily adaptable to changing whale patterns.

At the same time, it is imperative that the DMA program be strengthened, because, as the Assessment concludes, “[v]essels continue to transit thousands of nautical miles at speeds above 10 knots through active DMAs, where right whales are known to have aggregated.”¹³³ Given the urgent situation facing NARWs, immediate action should be taken to enhance the efficacy of the DMA program. Oceana urges the Fisheries Service to strengthen the DMA program by making adherence to the 10-knot speed limit mandatory. Making the speed limit inside DMAs mandatory will likely increase the likelihood of compliance, and will allow for potential enforcement.

Moreover, as noted above, to identify new SMAs, the Fisheries Service should closely track DMA locations and establish a formal process by which areas repeatedly designated as DMAs can become fast-track candidates for new SMAs.¹³⁴ This approach will ensure that SMAs continue to reflect of current NARW distributions and use patterns, and remain adequately protective.

3. Evaluation and Recommendations Regarding Vessel Size

The Vessel Speed Rule does not apply to vessels less than 65 feet in length, despite the fact that such vessels pose a significant risk to NARWs.

Accordingly, the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment recommends that the Fisheries Service “address vessel strike risk from small vessels.”¹³⁵ The Vessel Speed Rule Assessment further explains that “[s]mall vessels (< 65 ft in length) transiting at speeds in excess of 10 knots are ubiquitous in portions of right whale habitat. The number of documented and reported small vessel collisions with whales necessitates further action both as it relates to potential regulations and outreach to this sector of the mariner community.”¹³⁶

¹³⁴ Indeed, a technical memorandum issued by the Fisheries Service as far back as 2012 made this recommendation after observing that DMAs were repeatedly being established in certain areas. See Silber & Bettridge, NOAA Technical Memorandum NMFS-OPR-48, An Assessment of the Final Rule, supra note 132.

¹³⁵ Vessel Speed Rule Assessment at 37.

In support of these recommendations, the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment discusses a number of instances that demonstrate the significant risk posed to NARWs by vessels less than 65 feet in length—referred to as “small vessels” in the report. For instance, the Assessment notes that one study evaluated photographs of NARW propeller wounds to identify vessel size of the wounding vessel. Of 37 records reviewed, 18 of those had sufficient information to evaluate the injury.¹³⁷ “Of these, 11 cases (61%) involved small vessels < 65 ft in length, three involved vessels either under or over 65 ft and four were the result of strikes by vessels > 65 ft in length.”¹³⁸ The study also identified the vessel size involved in eight mortality or serious injury cases. “In six cases these vessels were > 65 ft in length and in two cases the vessels were found to be under 65 ft. Of these small vessel cases, one was a March 2005 mortality off Georgia where a 43-ft vessel was involved and the other a serious injury from April 2006 in Cape Cod Bay where a right whale was struck by a 50-ft research vessel.”¹³⁹

The Assessment underscores that the “[t]he proportion of small vessels involved in collisions with whales is concerning because the vessel speed rule does not apply to this vessel size class (< 65 ft in length). Small vessel collisions may be less likely to result in a serious injury or mortality, but at least one mortality and one serious injury were the result of small vessel collisions during this period.”¹⁴⁰ Moreover, even sublethal injuries may eventually lead to premature death.

These findings are made more troubling by the high number and percentage of vessels in the 40-foot to 65-foot range that traveling above the 10-knot speed limit. The Assessment found that “[t]he best available AIS data indicate that a substantial amount of small vessel traffic traveling at speeds in excess of 10 knots is present in active SMAs particularly in the Mid-Atlantic and to a lesser degree in the southeast. Pleasure and pilot vessels account for the majority of traffic transiting over 10 knots.”¹⁴¹ Indeed “more than 50% of pleasure vessel transit distance exceeded 10 knots and that number rose to more than 85% for pilot vessels.” The Assessment concluded that “[g]iven the ubiquity of small pleasure and pilot vessel traffic in some SMAs and the high speeds at which many travel, these vessel types may pose a particular threat to right whales.”¹⁴²

The Assessment concludes that “[v]essels under 65 ft in length are known to cause mortalities and injuries in right whales. The speed and characteristics of the small vessel traffic detailed here warrant further assessment.”¹⁴³ It further finds that “[t]he number of documented and reported small vessel collisions with whales necessitates further action both as it relates to potential regulations and outreach to this sector of the mariner community.”¹⁴⁴

Page 26 of 42

Oceana concurs with the Fisheries Services' conclusion that vessels less than 65 feet pose a significant threat to NARWs, and that action is needed to address such risks. In fact, according to a recent study, "vessels of all sizes pose a threat to seriously injure or kill whales."¹⁴⁴ Accordingly, Oceana urges the Fisheries Service to extend coverage of the Vessel Speed Rule to apply to vessels in at least the 40-foot to 65-foot range. As outlined in the Assessment, available data indicate that vessels in this range pose a significant risk to NARWs both in terms of documented vessel strike, and in terms of the prevalence of these vessels and the speeds at which they travel. NARWs typically grow from 45 to 55 feet in length, which means that vessels less than 65 feet in length could still be expected to cause significant injury or death, particularly for juveniles or calves.¹⁴⁵ Moreover, even if whales survive strikes from smaller vessels in the immediate aftermath, the injury or sub-lethal effects resulting from such strikes may hasten or eventually lead to their deaths. Notably, The Fisheries Service selected 65 feet as the size threshold for the rule not because scientific studies have demonstrated that vessels under 65 feet do not pose a fatal threat to NARWs, but because that size eligibility threshold is used in certain other regulations (e.g., Automatic Identification System ("AIS") requirements).¹⁴⁶

As outlined in the Assessment, similar 10-knot speed limits have been applied to vessels under 65 feet in recognition of their threat to NARWs. Notably, Canada recently expanded its 10-knot speed zone in the Gulf of St. Lawrence to include vessels in the 42 to 65 foot range.¹⁴⁷ In addition, in 2019, Massachusetts placed seasonal speed limits on all vessels less than 65 feet in length in Cape Cod Bay.¹⁴⁸ Applying the 10-knot speed limit to vessels less than 65 feet in length thus has precedent as a mechanism to enhance NARW protections.

In conjunction with the expansion of the Vessel Speed Rule, the Fisheries Service should work with the USCG to expand AIS carriage requirements to vessels at least in the 40-foot to 65-foot range. Other entities have AIS requirements for vessels in this range. As one example, the European Union requires AIS on fishing vessels 49 feet (15 meters) and longer.¹⁴⁹ This extension of the AIS requirement should include all vessel types, both commercial and recreational.

As noted in the Assessment, "USCG AIS carriage requirements do not apply to most vessels under 65 feet in length but many smaller vessels voluntarily carry AIS for safety or enjoyment. Because AIS use by small vessels is voluntary, the data are likely biased and not a representative sample of small vessel operations in SMAs. Bearing this in mind, we cannot draw holistic conclusions from this review of small vessel operations."¹⁵⁰ Requiring AIS on these vessels will allow for the Fisheries Service to track the speed of vessels in this size range to better grasp the threat to NARWs posed by this class of vessels. If the Fisheries Service extends the Vessel Speed Rule to these vessels, it will also promote compliance and enforcement efforts. AIS is a cost-effective tool for increasing transparency and ensuring compliance, as a Class A AIS transponder is a one-time expense, typically costing anywhere from $749 to $3,500, and does not require a monthly service fee.¹⁵¹

4. Evaluation and Recommendations Regarding Navigational Safety

The Vessel Speed Assessment includes an evaluation of whether the speed limits imposed by the Vessel Speed Rule pose a navigational safety issue, and concludes that this “investigation of navigational safety revealed no indication of impacts from implementation of the speed rule.”¹⁵² In the Assessment, the Fisheries Service discusses a previously-denied petition that was made in 2013 to create an exclusion from the vessel speed limit for “federally-maintained dredged channels and pilot boarding areas (and the immediately adjacent waters) for ports from New York to Jacksonville.”¹⁵³ However, the Assessment compared the number of groundings both before and after the effective date of the rule, but found that there was “actually a reduction in grounding events within active SMAs following implementation of the vessel speed rule,” and that “the initiation of the 10-knot speed rule is not associated with an increase in grounding incidents.”¹⁵⁴ The Assessment also evaluated potential concerns in the Port of Charleston, but found that the confluence of conditions likely to raise safety concerns was unlikely to arise.¹⁵⁵

Accordingly, Oceana urges the Fisheries Service not to create any additional exemptions on the basis of safety and take a hard look at the ongoing need for existing exemptions and exceptions to ensure that they remain effective and are not being abused or circumvented. An exemption for safety already exists in the Vessel Speed Rule, and additional exemptions are not necessary. Moreover, as indicated by the Assessment, there is no data that would justify additional safety-related exemptions at this time.

5. Evaluation and Recommendations Regarding Enforcement

The Vessel Speed Rule Assessment recommends enhanced enforcement and outreach to ensure greater compliance with the rule.¹⁵⁶ Among other things, the Assessment notes that “[t]he agency currently lacks data on the full extent of vessels’ reliance on the safety deviation but there are indications that some vessels may be claiming severe maneuverability constraints without reasonable grounds. There is no efficient mechanism by which the agency can collect such data from the logbook entries required for use of the safety deviation.”¹⁵⁷ To address this issue, the Assessment recommends “to aid enforcement of the speed rule, and to better understand the extent of safety impacts, NMFS should investigate modifications to the regulatory language including possible contemporaneous electronic notification of safety deviations.”

Oceana concurs with this recommendation and agrees that the Fisheries Service should identify a mechanism to hold vessels accountable for their speed and use of the “safety exemption.” Vessel operators can claim an exemption from the mandatory speed limit to maintain maneuverability under adverse conditions. The text of the regulation constrains when this exemption can be claimed to instances where “the vessel is in an area where oceanographic, hydrographic and/or meteorological conditions severely restrict the maneuverability of the vessel.”¹⁵⁸ However, anecdotal evidence suggests that some operators are abusing this exemption by claiming it whenever they exceed the speed limit in SMAs. Currently, vessel operators have to record information regarding speed deviations in their logbooks, but are not required to report such deviations. As noted above, the Assessment concludes that this current approach makes it difficult to evaluate the validity of safety-related exemption claims.

Oceana would support the contemporaneous reporting noted above to improve accountability. Another potential way to improve compliance would be to require annual or bi-annual reporting of such deviations, with a certification (under penalty of perjury) that such reports are true, accurate, and correct, and supported by verifiable oceanographic, hydrographic and/or meteorological conditions, with significant penalties for false reports. This would likely dissuade vessel operators from abusing the exemption. The USCG should also inspect ship logs as a part of regular USCG port state control boardings to check for abuse of the exemption.

In addition to the above, the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment also recommends that enforcement and outreach be targeted to certain SMAs and vessel types, based on the findings of the Assessment.¹⁵⁹ For instance, the Assessment explains that “[v]essels in certain SMAs exceed 10 knots at disproportionately high levels, especially OGVs [Ocean-Going Vessels] in channel entrances. OGVs entering southern ports under pilotage represent an outsized proportion of vessels traveling at excess speed. Additionally, container ships and pleasure vessels disproportionately operate at speeds in excess of 12 knots.”¹⁶⁰

In terms of past enforcement, the Assessment describes that the NOAA Office of Law Enforcement (“OLE”) and NOAA Office of General Counsel (“NOAA GC”) work together with the USCG to “spearhead a trio of enforcement contacts with mariners each year,” which include: (1) Notices of Violation and Assessment of Administrative Penalty (“NOVAs”) and Written Warnings; (2) Compliance Assistance Letters; and (3) hail and inform efforts by the USCG.¹⁶¹

Page 29 of 42

NOAA most often assesses a civil penalty “in cases where a vessel operator(s) has demonstrated a substantial or repeated failure to adhere to the speed rule. Written warnings may be issued by NOAA GC or OLE and are most often issued in less egregious cases.”¹⁶² After describing this enforcement regime, the Assessment explains that “[i]n recent years (2017-2019), NOAA GC, OLE, and USCG have had a total of 178 enforcement related contacts via these three avenues. There were 60 contacts in 2017, 54 in 2018 and 64 in 2019.”¹⁶³

Based on this description, it is not clear how many of the “enforcement contacts” involved a penalty, as opposed to how many did not. Oceana requests that the Fisheries Service further break down these numbers by type, and also provide information regarding the amount of penalties that were sought over these three years. Based on this limited information, it seems likely that enforcement efforts should be further ramped up to promote compliance with the Vessel Speed Rule.

Indeed, according to a 2014 report, the Fisheries Service issued twenty-eight Notices of Violation and Assessments of Civil Penalties (“NOVA”) between November 2010 and September 2012.¹⁶⁴ Despite the hundreds of violations observed, staff limitations required focusing on a small number of vessels exhibiting repeated and flagrant breaches of the speed restrictions. Penalties generally ranged from $5,750 to $92,000, with a mean of $21,845, despite the availability of significantly higher penalties.¹⁶⁵

Given the dire situation faced by NARWs, the Fisheries Service should significantly increase its enforcement efforts and make compliance with the rule and enforcement priority. As a part of this effort, NOAA should issue more NOVAs, as opposed to other warnings, and should seek penalties large enough to provide proper deterrence, as authorized by the ESA and MMPA, especially for higher speeds and repeat offenders.¹⁶⁶ In determining the proper penalty, NOAA should consider the amount of costs borne by ships that arrive late at their destination. If the cost of being late to port is much higher than the level of fines being imposed by NOAA, the deterrence value of its enforcement efforts will be weakened.

C. Comments on Improvements to Analysis in Vessel Speed Rule Assessment to Support Future Rulemaking

1. Data Sources

Oceana urges the Fisheries Service to make changes to the data sources that inform its reports and rules going forward. These changes will enhance the ability of the government, stakeholders, scientists, and citizens to participate intelligently in the regulatory process and to prevent vessel strikes to NARWs. Specifically, the future reports should continue to include data from all vessels that may pose a collision risk to NARWs – even small vessels under 65 feet in length not currently subject to the Vessel Speed Rule. Reports should moreover include data from both terrestrial and satellite AIS receivers.

First, as the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment itself noted, small vessels can play a big role in putting NARWs at risk of a collision (“Given the ubiquity of small pleasure and pilot vessel traffic in some SMAs and the high speeds at which many travel, these vessel types may pose a particular threat to right whales.”).¹⁶⁷ AIS data from these vessels is crucial. As the report also notes, “between 1999 and 2012, sufficient information was available to evaluate 18 injury cases” among NARWs. “Of these, 11 cases (61%) involved small vessels < 65 ft in length, three involved vessels either under or over 65 ft and four were the result of strikes by vessels > 65 ft in length.”¹⁶⁸ Thus, as the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment indicates, the Fisheries Service should continue to use AIS data from small vessels and should augment its role in analyses. As the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment notes, “mariners not required to carry AIS units, such as pleasure boats and sailboats, increasingly do so voluntarily,” and “[a]s a result, the quality and comprehensiveness of AIS data available today far exceed that of earlier years.”¹⁶⁹

Second, the Fisheries Service should consider satellite receivers’ data alongside terrestrial receivers’ data. Capturing all available AIS data is key to preventing vessel strikes. AIS technology is widely used on vessels (though should be more widely used on smaller vessels), and therefore makes a large pool of vessel data available. As the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment notes, the updated 2016 AIS carriage requirements mandated AIS for all commercial fishing vessels over 65 feet long, causing a surge in AIS traffic data from these types of ships as hundreds of fishing vessels began using AIS for the first time.¹⁷⁰ Vessels less than 65-feet long – often pleasure boats, sailboats, and similar craft – are not required to carry AIS units. But they increasingly do so voluntarily as AIS units become less expensive (as the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment notes)¹⁷¹ and in order to avoid colliding with other vessels in low-visibility conditions. As a result, the quality and comprehensiveness of AIS data has grown with time.¹⁷²

¹⁶⁹ Id. at 8.

¹⁷⁰ Id.

AIS is also key to the government's and stakeholders' ability to monitor sea traffic. As the Fisheries Service notes, the USCG carriage requirements dictate that most non-military vessels greater than 65 feet in length operate AIS units.¹⁷³ If a vessel fails to follow these AIS requirements, or unlawfully disengages their AIS equipment, the government has no way to track undetected vessel traffic.¹⁷⁴

Thus, given its widespread use and importance, the Fisheries Service should add AIS data gathered by satellite receivers to its reports and analyses informing rulemakings. Shore-based, or terrestrial, AIS receivers – the only type the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment used¹⁷⁵ – can accept data packages from vessels so long as they maintain line of sight with the transmitting vessel. The strongest class of onboard transponders, Class A, can send data to terrestrial receivers from a maximum range of about 60 nautical miles. Class B transponders – which recreational vessels commonly carry and which federal regulations allow fishing vessels to carry¹⁷⁶ – are much less powerful, covering only 40% of that distance. Satellite receivers, meanwhile, do not require a direct line of sight to a vessel and can view 5,000 to 10,000 square kilometers of water at once. Granted, weather and their constant orbits can create gaps in satellites' views. On the whole, however, satellites pick up about 50% more data than terrestrial receivers.

While terrestrial receivers may be cheaper for the government than buying satellite receivers' data, Oceana believes that adding in satellite data would provide a much fuller, richer picture of the vessel strike threat to NARWs. Oceana urges the Fisheries Service to use satellite receivers by procuring satellite receivers' data from private sources operating those receivers, or by increasing sharing of satellite receiver data from other government agencies that already receive it, such as the USCG. Adding satellite data is feasible; Oceana's own Ship Speed Watch tool uses satellite AIS data to shed light on vessel speeds in NARW habitats.¹⁷⁷

2. Methods

a. Measuring Compliance Using a More Complete Set of Methods

As noted above, the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment reports compliance with the Vessel Speed Rule within SMAs using distance distance-weighted average speed. This method calculates speed per segment of the transit, then produces an average speed weighted by the contribution of each segment to the transit as a whole. Oceana notes that there are other ways to report compliance. Another method would measure compliance against the total number of vessels within an SMA. For example, this approach would yield a 50% compliance figure when 50% of the vessels that went through the SMA exceeded 10 knots at least once. Both methods of reporting compliance are valid, and neither is intrinsically superior. But stakeholders would benefit in future reports or rulemakings from the use of both methods because the first, distance-focused method gives observers a look at (1) how geographically widespread threats to NARWs are while the second, ship-focused method shows (2) how many separate vessels typically break speed limits and threaten NARWs.

b. Repeatable Analyses

Oceana also urges the Fisheries Service to make their analyses repeatable and reproducible by outside stakeholders. Future assessments and rulemakings should convey information about the methods the Fisheries Service uses such that researchers can repeat the same work to verify it. This emphasis on repeatability will enhance the likelihood that the Fisheries Service’s reports and subsequent rulemakings are based on the best scientific and commercial data available and stand up to public, judicial, and scientific scrutiny. The current methods section of the Vessel Speed Assessment Rule (pp. 8-9) provides some helpful information on the Fisheries Service’s methods in calculating speed, classifying vessels, and other matters. But stakeholders would need more information to reproduce the report’s analysis.

Oceana also requests that the Fisheries Service publicly post on the internet the code underlying its analyses. A repository of the code would enable scientists, stakeholders, and others to repeat the agency’s work and suggest future improvements. The code should be organized and posted in a way that would enable visitors to the repository to easily download, sort, examine, and work with the code themselves. Other agencies in the federal government already post repositories of their code on Code.gov, a platform housing the government’s custom code, which promotes its reuse among federal agencies and collaboration with the public.¹⁷⁸

c. Data Capable of Informing the Development and Selection of Management Alternatives Meeting ESA and MMPA Goals and Requirements.

Fundamentally, the ESA and the MMPA require the Fisheries Service and other government agencies to make management determinations based on best scientific and commercial data available and/or the best scientific evidence available.¹⁷⁹ Under the ESA, for example, a listed species is eligible for protections and actions including designation of a critical habitat, consultation with the Fisheries Service when a federal action “may affect” a listed species, the promulgation of regulations, and more.¹⁸⁰ Similarly, under the MMPA, the government may take conservation and management measures if it determines a “strategic stock” of marine mammals is in danger of “depletion.”¹⁸¹ The selection of these management measures from among all the available alternatives requires sufficient, high-quality data. Taking the steps Oceana outlines above to increase the amount of data available to the Fisheries Service – and the ability of scientists and stakeholders to verify and augment it – will greatly improve the quality, robustness, and resilience of the Fisheries Service's decisions concerning crucial species like the NARW.

III. CALL FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION AND ADDITIONAL RECOMMENDATIONS

The Vessel Speed Rule Assessment demonstrates that vessel strikes remain a major risk for NARWs and that immediate action is needed to protect the NARW from future vessel strikes. North Atlantic right whales are critically endangered to the point where every life lost represents a catastrophic blow to the remaining population—with the Fisheries Service estimating in October 2020 that around 360 whales remained alive in January 2019, down from the prior year estimate of around 400 whales in January 2018.¹⁸² As a part of the ongoing Unusual Mortality Event, at least forty-nine whales have been lost or severely injured since 2017. In June 2019 alone, seven whales were killed, four of which were females of reproductive age; four whales were attributed to vessel strikes, while the cause of death was not determined for the other three whales.¹⁸³ Multiple recent calf deaths caused by ship strike are particularly heartbreaking and add to the urgency. In January 2020, one calf was presumed dead after being observed off the coast of Georgia with severe head and mouth injuries from a probable vessel strike, while another was found off the New Jersey coast in June 2020 bearing evidence of two vessel strikes.¹⁸⁴ Yet again in February 2021, another calf was found dead after being struck by a 54-foot long vessel off the coast of St. Augustine, Florida, at the same time his mother was observed with serious injuries indicative of vessel strike.¹⁸⁵

These continuing deaths and likely-fatal injuries underscore the urgency of implementing enhanced protections for NARWs. Resources must be mobilized to rapidly understand current shifts in NARW behaviors, and to quickly implement policy revisions that account for these shifts to diminish the risk of ship strikes and other fatal events.

Fortunately, the Fisheries Service and the USCG already possess ample authority to implement a number of additional protections for NARWs and to enhance current protections. These agencies should take immediate action to study, evaluate, and implement measures to prevent vessel strikes, and to halt the NARW's ongoing decline.

The 2019 North Atlantic Right Whale Consortium's annual report card estimated that only 409 individuals remained at the end of 2018, and found that one type of estimate, the "minimum number alive" method, placed the population as low as 327 in 2018. Using the authorities under Section 11 of the ESA and Section 112(a) of the MMPA, the Fisheries Service should immediately initiate a notice and comment rulemaking to strengthen NARW speed limit protections. Such action, in combination with the other recommendations outlined below, should be taken as quickly as possible.

A. Recommendations to Strengthen Vessel Speed Rule

The Fisheries Service current speed limit policies fall into two categories: (i) a mandatory 10-knot speed limit for ships greater than 65 feet long in fixed Seasonal Management Areas or “SMAs” where and when whales are historically known to frequent, and (ii) voluntary 10-knot speed limits in temporary Dynamic Management Areas or “DMAs” where whales have recently been observed. The current situation faced by NARWs rises to the level of an emergency, and both of these programs must be strengthened immediately to prevent further loss of life due to vessel strike.

The recommendations below should be implemented as quickly as possible given the escalating death toll of the Unusual Mortality Event. The Fisheries Service should promulgate interim/emergency regulations to immediately implement as many recommendations as possible, pending promulgation of final regulations. This includes making any voluntary actions (e.g., compliance with DMAs) mandatory, immediately establishing new interim SMA areas demonstrated to be important to NARWs (e.g., south of Nantucket/Martha’s Vineyard), extending the speed limit to vessels under 65 feet, and tailoring the blanket exemption for federal agencies, as discussed in more detail below.

To the extent the Fisheries Service determines that review under the National Environmental Policy Act (“NEPA”) is required to issue such emergency/interim regulations, the Fisheries Service should seek to use an emergency alternative arrangement pursuant to NEPA in order to expedite the process.¹⁸⁶ There is precedent for using such alternative procedures where threats to endangered species are concerned.¹⁸⁷ Once these interim/emergency regulations are in place, the Fisheries Service should proceed to conduct a full NEPA analysis and promulgate final, permanent regulations to prevent vessel strike.

Reg. 43,304, 43,339 (July 16, 2020) (“CEQ has approved alternative arrangements to allow a wide range of proposed actions in emergency circumstances including catastrophic wildfires, threats to species and their habitat, economic crisis, infectious disease outbreaks, potential dam failures, and insect infestations.”); Council on Environmental Quality, Emergencies and the National Environmental Policy Act Guidance, at 1 (Sept. 14, 2020), <https://ceq.doe.gov/docs/nepa-practice/emergencies-and-nepa-guidance-2020.pdf> (“CEQ has approved, and agencies have applied successfully, numerous alternative arrangements to allow a wide range of proposed actions in emergency circumstances including natural disasters, catastrophic wildfires, threats to species and their habitat, economic crisis, infectious disease outbreaks, potential dam failures, and insect infestations.”); see also CEQ, Alternative Arrangements Pursuant to 40 CFR Section 1506.11 – Emergencies, https://ceq.doe.gov/docs/nepa-practice/Alternative_Arrangements_Chart_051419.pdf (last updated May 2019); Nat’l Audubon Soc. v. Hester, 801 F.2d 405 (D.C. Cir. 1986).

Oceana’s recommendations include the following.

First, the Fisheries Service should expand the temporal and geographic scope of existing SMAs and create new SMAs in order to account for changing whale distribution patterns. The Fisheries Service established the temporal and geographic extent of these SMAs in 2008 and has not updated them to reflect current best available data, shifting whale patterns, or the population’s recent decline. As recognized in the Assessment, “[t]he 2008 speed rule included the designation of ten SMAs between Massachusetts and Florida informed by the best available information regarding vessel traffic characteristics and right whale distribution at the time.”¹⁸⁸ However, “[s]ince 2010, broad shifts in habitat preference have led to new high use areas in U.S. waters such as the region south of Martha’s Vineyard and Nantucket, MA . . . and increased the risk from anthropogenic threats as the whales moved into habitats with fewer protections in Canadian waters”¹⁸⁹

Examples of areas that should be made SMAs include:

- The area south of Nantucket and Martha’s Vineyard—an area that the Fisheries Service has repeatedly acknowledged is being used by NARWs as key foraging habitat and where 25% of the DMAs in the past 10 years have been declared.¹⁹⁰
- The areas off the coast of Virginia’s Chesapeake/Norfolk Port and Cape Hatteras, where NARWs have been observed in increasing numbers.¹⁹¹
- Offshore extension of the New York, New Jersey, Virginia, and other key SMAs in the Mid-Atlantic given increased whale activity.

To identify new SMAs, the Fisheries Service should establish a formal process by which areas repeatedly designated as DMAs become candidates for new SMAs.¹⁹² Moreover, existing SMAs should be evaluated to identify whether their duration is sufficient to protect whales, especially given the availability of acoustic monitoring data indicating that whales are using certain areas for large parts of the year, or even year-round.

Second, the Fisheries Service should make voluntary speed limits in DMAs mandatory. A number of studies have shown very low levels of cooperation with voluntary speed limits in DMAs, while showing markedly higher levels of compliance with the mandatory speed limit in SMAs.¹⁹³ The Vessel Speed Rule Assessment further confirmed limited mariner cooperation with the voluntary speed limits in DMAs.¹⁹⁴ However, this limited cooperation does not mean that the Fisheries Service should eliminate this program. DMAs fill an important niche by allowing the Fisheries Service to implement protections to quickly react to unexpected aggregations of NARWs. As a part of the 2008 Ship Strike Rule, the Fisheries Service stated that it would monitor voluntary compliance with designated DMAs and stated that “[i]f adherence is not satisfactory, the [Fisheries Service] will consider making them mandatory, through a subsequent rulemaking.”¹⁹⁵ The Fisheries Service should thus now take action to make DMA restrictions mandatory.

Third, exceptions to the mandatory speed limit should be narrowed. Among other things, the Fisheries Service should require vessels less than 65 feet long to comply with the speed limit, especially given studies indicating that smaller vessels also pose a lethal threat to NARWs, and the recent lethal strikes to young calves.¹⁹⁶ Notably, Canada recently expanded its 10-knot speed zone in the Gulf of St. Lawrence to include vessels in the 42 to 65 foot range.¹⁹⁷ Indeed, in the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment, the Fisheries Service acknowledged that vessels under 65 feet “are known to cause mortalities and injuries in right whales,” and that “[t]he number of documented and reported small vessel collisions with whales necessitates further action both as it relates to potential regulations and outreach to this sector of the mariner community.”¹⁹⁸ Yet another death in February 2021 demonstrates all too well the risk posed by vessels less than 65 feet long: a calf was found dead off the coast of St. Augustine, Florida with severe propeller wounds and fractured ribs and skull, at the same time his mother was observed with serious injuries indicative of vessel strike.¹⁹⁹ The Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission determined that the whales had been struck by a 54-foot fishing boat that had been traveling at 21 knots.²⁰⁰

The USCG should expand AIS requirements to vessels in the 40-foot to 65-foot range, at a minimum, both to improve navigational safety, and to allow for compliance monitoring and enforcement of vessel speed restrictions.

In addition, the Vessel Speed Rule currently provides a blanket exemption for all federal vessels—regardless of agency, type of vessel, or vessel activity.²⁰¹ The Fisheries Service justified this broad exemption because “the national security, navigational, and human safety missions of some agencies may be compromised by mandatory vessel speed restrictions.”²⁰² While this may be true for “some agencies” engaging in some critical activities, it does not stand to reason that the missions of all agencies would be compromised by speed limits regardless of the type of activities a vessel happens to be engaging in. As such, the exemption is overbroad and could be narrowed to cover only those government activities that actually do implicate national security and safety concerns. The Fisheries Service took a similar approach with respect to state law enforcement vessels—exempting them only if actually engaged in law enforcement or search and rescue duties.²⁰³ While federal vessels should continue to be exempt when engaging in true emergency, safety, or national security missions, they should be required to adhere to the speed limit when engaging in day-to-day transits and non-time-critical activities—especially given that NARW habitat is heavily transited by federal fleets.²⁰⁴ Indeed, the Fisheries Service has noted that its ship strike database contains a disproportionately high number of strikes attributable to the USCG and the Navy, although this may be in part due to a higher incidence of reporting.²⁰⁵

Using the authorities under Section 11 of the ESA and Section 112(a) of the MMPA, the Fisheries Service should immediately initiate a notice and comment rulemaking to strengthen NARW speed limit protections. Research has indicated that mandatory season-long speed limits of 10 knots in SMAs potentially reduced lethal vessel collision risk levels by ~86%.²⁰⁶ Thus, using the best available data to build on the existing framework presents an opportunity to greatly increase the protections afforded to NARWs.

In addition to the immediate need to enhance the Vessel Speed Rule, Oceana recommends that the Fisheries Service establish a requirement to issue an annual report evaluating potential opportunities to further enhance the Vessel Speed Rule. Given the rapidly deteriorating circumstances faced by NARWs, periodic reports on a set schedule are necessary to ensure the rule remains adequately protective.

B. Additional Recommendations

In addition to the enhancements to the Vessel Speed Rule noted above, the Fisheries Service and USCG should take immediate action to do the following:

- Invest in Monitoring Efforts and Studies to Understand Changing NARW Patterns for Use in Developing Mechanisms to Prevent Vessel Strike: The Fisheries Service should invest in a long-term passive acoustic monitoring network to better understand NARW distributions and should synthesize such data with visual and aerial survey data to gain a better understanding of where and when NARWs are most at risk. Implementing a long-term passive acoustic monitoring network would provide a more comprehensive understanding of NARW distributions, as such a network can continuously monitor for whales regardless of weather and sea conditions.²⁰⁷ The Fisheries Service should also harness advancements in technology to improve NARW monitoring and to obtain the best available data on NARW distributions and behaviors. In addition to passive acoustic monitoring, such technologies include satellite monitoring,²⁰⁸ and the use of undersea, surface, and aerial drones to supplement more traditional monitoring activities.²⁰⁹ These monitoring efforts are key to quickly and effectively determining whether or not the geographical and temporal scope of existing SMAs should be expanded. New technologies—such as drones combined with passive acoustic monitoring—have also shown promise in identifying whale locations in near real-time,²¹⁰ and could be used to nimbly adopt temporary protections.
- Evaluate New and Existing Ship Routing Measures to Enhance NARW Protections: The USCG should conduct a comprehensive port access route study (“PARS”) evaluating new and existing routing measures (e.g., TSS, ATBAs, recommended routes) for the purpose of enhancing NARW protections.²¹¹ The USCG undertook a similar effort back in 2005, when it conducted a PARS that delineated recommended routes for vessels traveling through Cape Cod Bay and to ports in Florida and Georgia in order to reduce vessel strikes.²¹² Example actions the USCG should take in connection with the PARS include:

- Evaluate and enhance existing routing measures adopted to protect NARWs. As part of its review to ensure the routes remain adequately protective of NARWs, the USCG should make these routes mandatory. Currently, they are only “strongly recommended.”²¹³
 - Integrate consideration and implementation of NARW protective measures into all PARS conducted in NARW habitat. For example, the USCG recently announced a PARS to evaluate the adequacy of existing vessel routing measures and to determine whether additional routing measures are necessary in the Northern New York Bight,²¹⁴ where calf #3560 was found dead off New Jersey. The USCG should evaluate and implement routing measures to protect NARWs as a part of such PARS.
 - Identify existing routing measures for priority evaluation for the purpose of enhancing NARW protections. For instance, the USCG should move to rapidly evaluate potential measures to protect NARWs in the vicinity of the New York TSS where NARWs are increasingly observed.
 - After completing the PARS, the USCG should quickly move to implement recommendations to protect NARWs, seeking approval from the International Maritime Organization, as necessary.
- Revise and Expand NARW Critical Habitat to Further Protect the Species From Human-Caused Threats, Including Vessel Strikes: The Fisheries Service also has the authority to designate critical habitat for endangered species. Section 4 of the ESA provides that “to the maximum extent prudent and determinable,” the Services shall designate critical habitat for listed species.²¹⁵ The statute also empowers the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Commerce to issue regulations to protect critical habitats.²¹⁶ The Fisheries Service has designated two primary “units” of critical habitat for NARWs—one unit located in the Gulf of Maine and Georges Bank region off the coasts of Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Maine, and a second unit off the coast of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida. However, NARW critical habitat has not been updated since the beginning of 2016.²¹⁷ The Fisheries Service should revise the critical habitat designation for the NARWs in light of new data and information on changing NARW distributions. In particular, the Fisheries Service should revise the critical habitat area in New England to encompass the area south of Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard, where increasing numbers of whales have been spotted year round.

- Ensure the Efficacy of Project-Specific NARW Mitigation to Prevent Vessel Strike: Section 7(a)(2) of the ESA requires federal agencies to consult with the Fisheries Service to “insure that any action authorized, funded, or carried out by such agency . . . is not likely to jeopardize the continued existence of any endangered species or threatened species or result in the destruction or adverse modification of [critical] habitat[.]”²¹⁸ Through this consultation, the Fisheries Service may impose project-specific mitigation measures and conditions, known as “reasonable and prudent measures” (“RPMs”) on the action to protect NARWs and to prevent “take” of NARWs.²¹⁹ As noted in the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment “[a]s part of the Section 7 consultation process, NMFS and its federal partners regularly evaluate vessel strike risk to right whales and, where appropriate, NMFS recommends federal agencies implement reasonable and prudent measures to minimize such risk.”²²⁰ Indeed, as the Vessel Speed Assessment further notes, “[a]lthough these vessels are exempt from the speed rule they are not exempt from consultation under Section 7 of the ESA. During consultations, mitigation measures, including speed restrictions, may be recommended to reduce the threat of vessels collisions with right whales.”²²¹ Thus, through the Section 7 consultation process, mitigation measures to prevent NARW vessel strikes—such as vessel speed limits—can be imposed on projects as a condition of approval. This authority is important because vessels owned by the federal government are currently exempt from the Vessel Speed Rule.²²² The Fisheries Service should narrow the exemption for federal vessels, as noted above. However, at the very least, the Fisheries Service should be imposing speed limits as a part of project-specific consultation, and should re-initiate consultation to impose additional mitigation where warranted. The Fisheries Service should also adaptively manage existing approvals under the MMPA to ensure a negligible impact on NARWs and that mitigation is achieving the least practicable adverse impact on NARWs.
- Cooperate with Canada to Enhance NARW Protection and Prevent Vessel Strike: NARW habitat spans the area from Canada down the eastern coast of the United States to Florida. Given that significant casualties have occurred in Canada in recent years, the U.S. and Canada should cooperate to develop complementary management regimes, coordinate monitoring and surveys, and identify best practices to avoid vessel strikes.

For example, the U.S. and Canada should form a working group composed of key members of each country’s main NARW-related regulatory bodies that will transparently work with all stakeholders to protect NARWs, and should sign a memorandum of understanding detailing their joint plans. This memorandum of understanding could include an agreement to set mutual standards in key areas such as ship speeds and gear markings.

C. Enhance Compliance Monitoring and Enforcement Efforts

As underscored in the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment, “[m]ariner compliance with the vessel speed rule is critical to effectiveness.”²²³ The Fisheries Service and USCG should coordinate to step up efforts to monitor compliance and increase enforcement and should make NARW protection a publicized enforcement priority. The Fisheries Service’s Vessel Speed Rule Assessment provides a detailed assessment of noncompliance across SMAs and vessel types and should be used to set enforcement priorities.²²⁴

Technological improvements can be used to identify and enhance enforcement against illegal vessel operations. For instance, in July 2020, Oceana launched Ship Speed Watch, a tool that uses data from vessel AIS devices to allow users to monitor vessel speeds and positions in near real-time.²²⁵ In addition to identifying violations after the fact, the USCG should monitor AIS data for noncompliance in real-time and should increase its efforts to warn speeding vessels to reduce their speed while they are still in transit. The USCG should also inspect and audit vessel logs as a part of its regular port state control boardings to check for abuse of exemptions claimed to justify noncompliance with the speed limit. In addition, the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment indicates that additional regulatory changes may be necessary to reduce potential exemption abuse, recommending that “NMFS should investigate modifications to the regulatory language including possible contemporaneous electronic notification of safety deviations.”²²⁶ The Fisheries Service should either require such notifications or require annual or bi-annual reporting certifying, under penalty of perjury, that the safety deviations are in accordance with the requirements of the Vessel Speed Rule.

The USCG should also take steps to require continuous AIS transmissions and enforce against vessels that are not properly utilizing or are shutting off their AIS instrumentation. Such behavior not only poses serious safety concerns, but may allow circumvention of the speed rule requirements.

IV. CONCLUSION

Oceana appreciates the opportunity to provide comments on the Vessel Speed Rule Assessment. Oceana reiterates that immediate, decisive action is needed to protect NARWs from vessel strikes, and urges the Fisheries Service, the USCG, and other agencies to take the actions recommended herein. Fortunately, the relevant federal agencies already possess ample authority to implement a number of protections for NARWs. These agencies should take immediate action to study, evaluate, and implement measures to prevent vessel strikes, and to halt the NARW's ongoing decline.
